PREFACE.

THE use of a Universal Gazetteer, to those who feel any interest at all in what is going on in the world at large, is too obvious to need pointing out. Its name seems to imply, that it is the companion, or accompaniment of the newspaper, or gazette, which latter name was derived from the gazetta, a small coin of Venice, the original price of these periodical chronicles in that commercial republic.

A work of this kind, necessarily formed of materials brought from every quarter of the world, at uncertain and different periods, and, generally by we know not whom, is peculiarly liable to errors, and the compiler must confine himself within very narrow bounds, indeed, if he do not submit to these imperfections.

In the compilation of this work, the latest and most authentic accounts have been consulted; from travelling, the author has been enabled to correct several errors, and from correspondents he has received descriptions of some places, which are certainly the best and most accurate that have been yet offered to the public in this way.

Towns and places of note are described at length, or form distinct paragraphs; the names of these are given in capitals. Even villages, hamlets, and single houses, in these islands, have been mentioned, and, in some instances, their situations pretty precisely told; but these, as inferior articles, are given in a different character, or letter, and do not form different paragraphs, but are carried on in continuity, generally forming only distinct periods. The expressions of inferior and considerable, or of note, are meant not in reference to wealth but to population. If errors occur in the places of less note, which they probably may, and, indeed, necessarily must, (for, in attempting to make this the completest geographical index extant, works of more dubious authority have also been consulted,) it may be well enough to caution the reader to suspend his analogical conclusions, and that if a place, which he knows, be inaccurately described, he may reasonably suppose that others are also incorrect, and that places more remote, or distant, must necessarily be more false." It will only, in such case, be the part of candour to consider, that such places are, perhaps, but little visited by travellers, and scarcely known beyond their own vicinity; and that if he, or some of his liberal-minded neighbours, do not communicate better information to the compiler, the error is likely to be continued.

And here the author hopes it will not be thought improper, if he takes the liberty to suggest to men of leisure and information, whether they may not apply a few moments of their time, in a way satisfactory to themselves, and useful to the public, in communicating to the gazetteer-makers topographical information. If such will have the kindness to contribute to this work, their communications will be gratefully received; here also he may acknowledge to have received from several of his friends, and even from strangers, of this description, both of the established religion and dissenters, very liberal encouragement in the prosecution of this work. But the present is a production which it does not require erudition to find fault with or amend. There is scarcely any individual but may suggest improvements, or give useful information, on some place which he knows: and every reader, from the school-boy to the man in years, who shall communicate amendments, will confer an obligation on the author.

All who may have the liberality thus to yield assistance to the work, are requested particularly to give information on such subjects as the following, or as an answer to any of these queries:—What is the place?—What its name?—In what district situated?—How many houses or people?—What the soil?—What the appearance of the surrounding country?—By what production or manufacture are they enabled to support themselves, pay taxes, &c.?—What curiosities have they or had they, natural or artificial?—What particular customs?—What public establishments of Infirmaries, Hospitals, Schools, Libraries, &c.?—What the situation of the place?—On hill or in vale; on what road or highway; or on what river, bay, creek, or sea?—And what are its distances and bearings from other places, &c.?—What places already mentioned in this work are so insignificant, that they ought to be omitted?—And which are so important that they ought to form distinct paragraphs?

It may be necessary here to notice the improvements introduced into all parts of the present edition, as the proprietors, encouraged by the flattering reception with which the first edition was favoured, have spared no exertion or expence to render this extensive Gazetteer still more worthy of the public patronage.

In the execution of this task, and in order to render the following sheets as complete as the nature of the work will admit, the attention of the publishers has been particularly directed to the inserting such omissions, and correcting such errors, as must have unavoidably escaped the author, in compiling so laborious a work.

In the first edition, no notice was taken of a subject affording much useful and necessary information, although a heavy national calamity, viz. War; nor of the facts and circumstances relating to it; military and naval establishments, fortifications, battles, sieges, and other remarkable operations and events, by which the most important changes are produced in the political state of nations.

In the description of a considerable number of the principal empires and countries, the usual division of the regions (in common with all our competitors) was erroneous; the geographical position, bearings, distances, &c. of places, were not laid down with uniform accuracy; nor was the least attention paid to the markets and principal fairs in the several counties of England and Wales. Many mistakes have also arisen from the same words occurring frequently in various parts, with different spellings, &c. &c. all which deficiencies and inaccuracies have, in this edition, been duly attended to and remedied; the whole of this Gazetteer having been lately revised and corrected at a very great expence, and with unremitting attention and assiduity.

Some considerable improvements have likewise been introduced, by adding to the composition of this work, a number of remarkable and important places omitted in the late edition. The reader may also find much new and interesting information in the numerous additions occasionally made to places already noticed, several of which will be found to be considerably improved, if not written entirely new; notwithstanding which, the work, although considerably augmented in valuable and authentic nomenclature, is yet not enlarged in size and price.

The insertions made, include different topics of designation and description, but chiefly relate to the curiosities of nature and art, natural productions, forms of government, military and naval affairs, inland navigations, manufactures, magnificent public buildings, and the remains of remarkable antiquities; with several original communications addressed to the editor, pointing out sources of information and improvement, not often to be met with.

These additions the editor has been enabled to make, by omitting the latitudes and longitudes of places apparently insignificant, or whose situations may be easily ascertained by a reference to places generally known; by reducing and narrowing some accounts rather too circumstantial and minute for an abridgment; and by expunging several articles of less essential importance, which, though not unworthy of attention, leave little room for others that, on further consideration, appear to be more useful and interesting.

The editor, however, in stating the progressive improvements by which he has added to the stock of knowledge contained in our Geographical Dictionaries, does not thereby mean to assert, that he has so fully executed his plan, but that he himself can discover some faults and imperfections both in the work and its execution. Much has been done, yet much remains undone, to improve and bring to perfection the arduous task of compiling Gazetteers and Dictionaries. It is only by slow degrees, and long and persevering exertions, continued through several centuries, that this comprehensive subject can be expected to arrive at extensive usefulness; but, from the mutability of things, it can never be finally brought to a state of full perfection.

The publishers, however, not presuming to suggest that they have completely succeeded in the execution of this undertaking, yet relying on the candid decision of a discerning public, hope, with some confidence, that the performance, now respectfully submitted to their notice, will be found amusing and entertaining, as well as useful and instructive to the GENERALITY OF READERS; and they trust it may claim the peculiar attention of the YOUNG, and SUCH AS ARE NOT ABLE TO PROCURE LARGER WORKS; for the use, indeed, of whom it is principally designed and calculated. The reader, whether scientific or less informed, will be candid enough, it is presumed, to excuse small mistakes, for the sake of the pleasure, satisfaction, and information, which it is natural to suppose, the highly interesting objects contained in the science here treated of, will afford to his mind.

THE compiler of this work is unwilling to dismiss it, without mentioning a practice which he used to adopt, as a geographical exercise for his scholars, when engaged in that pleasing task, the tuition of youth, hoping that, if parents and teachers will but try it, the scholars and children may derive from it a pleasing and useful amusement. The method was, to propose an imaginary journey; suppose from Dublin to Paris, to Rome, to Constantinople, to Jerusalem, to Delhi, to Pekin, or to any other place; or an imaginary voyage, direct or circuitous, or round the world, or long or short. In the first instance, from Dublin to Paris, it was proposed to the lower classes to describe the easiest course: these chose, perhaps, that by water, from the mouth of the Liffey, southward through the Irish Channel, round the Land's End, by the Isles of Scilly, and eastward through the English Channel, to Havre, at the mouth of the Seine; and thence up the river, to the capital. Others adopted a more western circuitous course, through the south of Ireland, and across the sea to Nantz, or Bourdeaux, on their way to Paris. Some took the post road, or a devious way, through Wales and England, to Dover and Calais; and others, perhaps, chose a route through the north of Ireland, Scotland, across the German Ocean, and through some of the continental countries of Europe in a SW direction to Paris. In all these instances, they planned out their route by the maps, and related, in form of a letter, what they thought the most entertaining in the descriptions of the places along the way, which they found in the Gazetteer.

Though Geography be one of the most plain and simple sciences, being much easier learnt than reading and writing, there are some parents who declare they know very little of the subject; to these the following remark may be acceptable, as it may enable them to lead their children on, as above-mentioned, in imaginary journeys, or tours, round the earth, till they obtain, in this familiar way, a tolerable acquaintance with the different parts of our globe.

To conceive aright of the world, being represented in two circles on the map, they are to observe, that each of them represents a hemisphere, or opposite half of the globe: if these circles were put back to back, fastened at the edges all round, and swelled up like a blown bladder into a spherical form, it would give a representation of our earth; when, therefore, in marking any line on either of these circles, we get off at one edge, we are immediately on the corresponding part of the other, and so, on it, may pursue, or continue our track or way. Hence it will appear, that in describing a track round the whole earth, or globe, on the map, we must necessarily cross both the circles.

PREFACE

SIXTH EDITION.

THROUGHOUT the several editions of this work, it has been the practice of giving the original Preface as furnished by the compiler, Dr. Walker, not only that the reader may survey the origin and progress of the undertaking from its first appearance before the Public, but that it should appear as near its original feature as when first established by the learned and laborious compiler. Each successive Edition has had to boast the correction of mistakes, always unavoidable in so comprehensive and extensive a work as a Gazetteer of the Known World, or the addition of improvements and discovery of places before unnoticed. Without detracting from the successive labors bestowed on four Editions, since the first, it may be fairly declared that no one Edition has received such amendments as the present; indeed the eventful change that has taken place throughout the continent of Europe since the last Edition, has been such, that in the ordinary course of history has not occurred during a century; the partition of Kingdoms has caused names to disappear from the face of Geography, whilst, on the other hand, Places and Ports have sprung up as it were by magic.

The Annals of Geography have never presented a period of more importance than the recent transitions of affairs in France, from the revolution, which has for the last 20 years been gradually aggrandizing its territory to the greatest part of the Continent, it has in the short space of as many weeks suddenly sunk to its ancient boundary. And its high and mighty Emperor, who dictated at one time to every King and Kingdom except Great Britain, is now an outcast in a Tuscan Island.

Exclusive of the greatest attention having been paid to the present Compilation by a general correction of mistakes, and supplying many deficiencies; the more obsolete spelling of names has been universally amended, and many thousand names have been introduced, hitherto unnoticed. Another new feature in the present Edition is giving an exact account of the Population of all the Counties and chief Towns in Great Britain, as recently taken by order of Parliament, which will be found not only useful but amusing to the studies of statistics. The distances of villages from the nearest towns have not only been corrected in those before given, but many insertions in miles which before had only the bearing given.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

LAND AND WATER.

A CONTINENT is a large tract of land not separated by the sea, as Europe, Asia, &c. An ocean is a vast collection of water not separated by land; as the Atlantic, Pacific, &c. A sea is a smaller collection of water, communicating with the ocean; as the Mediterranean, the Baltic.

An island is a tract of land surrounded by water; as Great Britain, Ireland, &c. A lake is water surrounded by land; as the lake of Geneva.

A cape, or promontory, is a projection or point of land running far into the sea; as the Cape of Good Hope.

A peninsula is land almost surrounded with water; as the Morea. A gulf is a part of the sea almost surrounded with land; as the Gulf of Persia.

An Isthmus is the narrow part of land which joins a peninsula to a continent, or larger country; as the Isthmus of Suez. A strait is a narrow channel which affords a passage from one sea to another; as the Straits of Gibraltar.

DEFINITIONS OF CIRCLES, &c.

Astronomers have considered the starry heavens as a sphere, with our earth in the centre; this is the appearance they make to our senses. They have divided the celestial and terrestrial spheres, by great and less circles; great circles are those which divide the sphere equally; lesser circles are those which divide it unequally.

Great Circles.	Lesser Circles.
The Ecliptic.	Parallels of Latitude and Declination.
The Equator.	Tropics.
Circles of Longitude and Meridian.	Polar Circles.
The Horizons.	Almicanters, or Parallels of Altitude.
Azimuths.

To imagine that the Earth stands still, and that the sun rises and falls, is a false idea, however consonant to the perception of our senses, and as romantic as the notion that houses, trees, &c. upon land are moving past us, when we sail in a vessel along the shore.

While our earth annually performs an orbit round the sun, the latter appears to describe a circle in the heavens, and we seem to stand still; this circle is called the ecliptic. The zodiac is the same imaginary kind of circle, but extended to a considerable breadth on each side of the ecliptic, including the paths of all the planets.

The ancients divide the Zodiac into 12 parts, and imagined or contrived certain signs in each division. Their names and characters are as follow:

Northern Signs.	Southern Signs.
♈ Aries.	♎ Libra.
♉ Taurus.	♏ Scorpio.
♊ Gemini.	♐ Sagittarius.
♋ Cancer.	♑ Capricornus.
♌ Leo.	♒ Aquarius.
♍ Virgo.	♓ Pisces.

The equator divides the sphere into the northern and southern hemispheres. The latitude of a place upon earth, and the declination of a heavenly object, as a star or planet, are their distances from the equator. The tropics are parallels of latitude or declination, near $23\frac{1}{2}$ degrees from the equator: the tropics bound the ecliptic in the heavens, and on earth, the torrid zone. The polar circles are the same distance from the poles as the tropics are from the equator. On earth, the temperate zones lie between the polar circles and tropics, the frigid zones lie within the polar circles.

Meridians are indefinite in number, their planes intersect that of the equator at right angles.

The longitude of a place upon earth, and the right ascension of a heavenly object, are their distances from a certain meridian. Circles of longitude in the heavens are indefinite in number; their planes intersect that of the ecliptic at right angles. The latitude of any heavenly object is its distance from the ecliptic; the longitude its distance from that circle of longitude, which passes through the first point of Aries.

The horizon is that circle which bounds our sight, or it is the termination of what is visible to us of the sky, when on the sea, or an extensive level plane.

SOLAR SYSTEM.

The names and characters by which astronomers express the planets, are as follow, in order from the sun:

Mercury.	Venus.	Earth.	Mars.	Jupiter.	Saturn.	Herschel.

The planets are attracted by the sun, and would be drawn into it, and consumed, were it not for an impulse they have received, which tends to throw them off in a right line: by the combination of these two forces, (the centripetal, or centre-seeking, and the centrifugal, or centre-fleeing) they are preserved in their orbits.

The three outer planets have each of them several satellites, or moons, accompanying them. The comets of our system are supposed to be 21 in number, they are found to be under the same laws with the planets, but their orbits are very eccentric.

 An idea of a place, or its situation, may sometimes be formed from its name. In England, borough, bury, berry, burgh, or brough, as also caster, chester, ceaster, and chaster, at the end of the name of a place, show it to have been a town or fortified place. Chip, cheap, chipping, in the names of places, implies a market; combe, a valley between two hills: and comb in the end, or comp in the beginning of names, a low situation. Minster, is a contraction of monastery. Mouth, expresses the situation where a river falls into the sea, or other water; and ness, a promontory which runs into the water in a form resembling a nose. Thorp, throp, threp, trep, and trop, all signify a village; and wold, whether singly or jointly, signifies a plain open country, or hills without a wood.

In Ireland, ard signifies high; ath, water; bally, a town, and clon, a retirement. Dun and rath, imply, a fort. Innis, signifies an island, kil, a church; knock, a hill; lis, an inclosure; lough, a lake; and magh, a field.

THE

AAL — AAR

AA, three large rivers, one in Courland, running into the bay of Riga; one of Artois, rising in Picardy, and passing by St. Omers and Gravelines, below which it falls into the English Channel; and one in Westphalia, rising near Munster, waters that city, and afterwards falls into the river Embs: also the name of several other smaller rivers of France, Germany, Flanders, Norway, Swisserland, and the United Provinces.

AACH, a small town of Nellenburgh, in Suabia, near a river of the same name, which falls into the Lake of Zell. It is subject to Austria, and seated on an eminence between the Danube and the Lake of Constance. Lat. 47 45 N lon. 9 0 E.

AAGGII DOGGII, a mountain of Amasia, in Turkey, on the frontiers of Persia, over which the caravans pass, in their journey from Constantinople to Ispahan.

AAG HOLM, a small island on the coast of Norway. Lat. 58 N.

AAIN CHARIN, a village near Jerusalem, said to be the place where Zacharias lived, and much frequented by pilgrims. Its convent is a large elegant building, with a handsome cupola, having under a fine mosaic pavement: the altar is very splendid, encompassed with marble steps, said to be built on the spot where John the Baptist was born.

AAKIAR, a district of N. Jutland.

AAKIRKE, a town in the island of Bornholm, Denmark, and the seat of the civil court and synod.

AALAST, or AELST. See ALOST.

AALBERG, or AALBOURG, (that is, eel-town, from the number of eels taken there,) in Jutland, an old, large and populous city, and, next to Copenhagen, the richest and best in Denmark. It has an exchange, and a harbour deep and secure, but rather dangerous in its entrance from the Cattegat. It carries on a considerable trade in herrings and corn, and has a manufactory of saddles, gloves, guns, pistols, &c. Lat. 57 18 N lon. 10 36 E.

AALEN, a town in Suabia, 30 m. N of Ulm.

AALHEIDE, a large heath in Jutland.

AAMA, a province of Barbary, 15 days' journey from Tunis. The entrance to it is very dangerous, being long and narrow, among quicksands and rivers, so covered with dust, that they appear like one continued plain.

AAN SIRE, a small island of Norway.

AAR, two large rivers in Germany and Swisserland, the former of which rises in Blankenheim, Westphalia, and falls into the Rhine opposite Lintz, in Cologne: the latter rises near the source of the Rhine, and after passing through the Lakes of Brientz and Thun, falls into the Rhine near Zursach, in Baden: and an island in the Baltic, for which last see ARROE.

AARASSO, an ancient city of Asia Minor, mentioned by Strabo, but at present only a village.

AARAW, a town and bailiwick in Bern, Swisserland, on the river Aar, contains about 1700 inhab. Here the diets of the protestant cantons are held. In these assemblies, the deputies and their servants, being all citizens, dine in the same hall. The principal manufactures are cotton, printed linens, cutlery, and tanning. Lat. 47 20 N lon. 8 10 E.

AARBERG, or AARBURG. See ARBERG.

AARDALSWERK, or SEMDALSWERK, a copper-work, now disused, in the parish of Leyrdal, in Norway.

AARHUUS, a diocese of N. Jutland, erected in the year 950. It contains 308 parishes, besides the capital.

AARHUUS, HARHUS, or ARHUSEN, an open, large, and populous city, with two market-places, a hospital, university, cathedral, and other public buildings. It lies low, on a beautiful plain, between the sea and an inland lake; from which last the water is conveyed, by a canal, through the town. The harbour at the mouth of this canal is very safe and commodious, but hardly of sufficient depth and extent for the trade of the place. Lat. 56 6 N lon. 10 10 E.

AARSEO, or ARZEO, a trading town of Algiers, near the mouth of the river Mina. Lat. 36 50 N lon. 2 10 E.

AAR's HERRED, a district of N. Jutland, containing 14 parishes.

AASTRUP, a district of Aalberg, in N. Jutland, to which belong the Herreds of Wenneborg, with 12 parishes, and Jerlef, with the like number.

AASUM HERRED, a district of Nyborg, in Funen, containing 11 parishes.

AATTIC, a village in Aatter, a district of Yemen, in Arabia Felix.

ABA, a city of the ancient kingdom of Phocis, in Greece.

ABABA, the modern name of the Peneus, a celebrated river of Thessaly.

ABACA, one of the Philippine Islands.

ABACH, or WELTENBURG, a town of Lower Bavaria, situated on the Danube, having excellent springs of mineral waters celebrated for curing many diseases, as also several remarkable Roman antiquities. Lat. 48 53 N lon. 11 59 E.

ABACO, one of the Lucaya or Bahama Islands. Lat. 26 40 N lon. 77 4 W.

ABACOORE, a mountain of Arabia Felix.

ABADAN, a town of Persia, situated at the mouth of the Tigris.

ABAFEDE, a mountain in Egypt, the residence, in antiquity, of the Egyptian Magi; it was much revered by the Romans on their obtaining it, and was afterwards inhabited by Christian devotees, who lived in caves dug out of the rock.

ABAKAN, a river falling into the Jenesei, near its source in Asiatic Russia, and 16 m. S of the town of Abakansk, in the province of Kolivan. Lat. 53 5 N lon. 94 5 E.

ABALA, an ancient city of the tribe of Judah.

ABALASKOI, or ABALAK, a town of Siberia, near Tobolsk, frequented by pilgrims, on account of a statue, called the image of the Virgin Mary. Lat. 58 11 N lon. 68 20 E.

ABALLO. See AVALLON.

ABANO, a town of Padua, famous in ancient and modern times for its warm baths. In one of these, called Bagnio di Fanga, the patient, in hopes of a cure, is covered with warm mud. Lat. 45 30 N lon. 10 47 E.

ABARANER, a city of Turcomania, in Tartary, on the river Alingema, 20 m. N of Nacksivan. Lat. 39 0 N lon. 63 59 E. It contains about 300 Christian families.

ABARGALE, a country of Abyssinia.

ABARIM, or ABARAIM, in sacred history, high mountains of steep ascent, which separated the territory of the Moabites and Ammonites from Canaan. Nebo and Pisgah were among them, and Moses died on one of them.

ABASA, a small town of Romania, 12 m. from Adrianople, on the road to Constantinople, in which are an elegant mosque and a spacious kane or inn.

ABASKAJA, a town on the river Ischim, in Siberia. Lat. 50 10 N lon. 69 5 E.

ABASSIA, the modern name of a kingdom in Upper Ethiopia; it comprehends the provinces of Bageneder, Gojam, Waleka, Shewa, &c.: in some parts the rocks are so steep, that men and cattle are craned up by help of ropes and ladders, yet on the tops of these there are woods, meadows, and fish-ponds.

ABATOS, an island of Egypt, in the Lake Mœris, famous for being the sepulchre of Osiris, and producing the papyrus, of which the ancients made their paper.

Abatrige, in the parish of Brenzet, near Appledore, Kent.

ABAWI, a river in Abyssinia, having a remarkable cataract at Alata.

ABAWIWAR, a country in Upper Hungary.

Abbas Combe, a parish in Somersets. 4 m. from Milburn-Port. Abbatsm, or Abbotston, near Alresford, Hants.

ABBEFIORD, a sea-port of Aggerhuys, in Norway, 48 m. from Christiana.

Abbenhall, Glouc. 12 m. from the city of Gloucester, and 3 from Newnham: noted for a spring of rock water, very efficacious in the cure of cutaneous eruptions.

ABBERFORD, a town in the W. Riding of Yorks. noted for a manufactory of pins: it stands on the great Roman causeway, which, between this and Castleford, appears entire, though nearly 1800 years old. It is 16 m. SW of York, and 184 NNW of London. Market on Wedn.

Abberley, a village 8 m. from Bewdley, Worcest. on the Kington canal.

Abberlough, a lake in Argyleshire.

Abberton, near Lexden, Essex. Abberton, near Pershore, 7 m. from Worcester, noted for its bitter mineral water. Abberwick, NW of Alnwick, Northumberland.

ABBEVILLE, a considerable town in the depart. of Somme, France, 15 m. from the English Channel, seated in a pleasant valley, and contains about 12,000 inhab. It is famous for its manufacture of black and green soaps, woollen cloths and carpets, and carries on an extensive trade by means of the river Somme, which runs through the town, in which the tide rises 6 feet. Its once handsome church is now in ruins. It is 52 m. S of Calais, and 85 N by W of Paris. Lat. 50 7 N lon. 1 49 E.

ABBEVILLE, a county of S. Carolina.

* ABBEY-BOYLE, a town in Roscommon, Connaught, 20 m. N of Roscommon, 82 NW of Athlone, and 84 from Dublin, situated on the river Buelle, over which there are 2 stone bridges. It is chiefly remarkable for its old abbey.

Abbey-Feale, a small town in Limerick.

ABBEY-HOLME, or HOLME CULTRUM, a town in Cumberland, so called from an abbey built there by David king of Scots. It is seated on an arm of the sea, 11 m. from Wigton, and contains about 2200 inhab.

Abbey-Manor, Berksh. 3 m. from Wantage.

ABBEY-MILTON, or MIDDLETON, an ancient little town in Dorsetshire, noted formerly for its abbey. It is 12 m. NE of Dorchester.

Abbey Knockmoy, a town in Galway, Connaught. Abbey Mahon, in Cork, Munster. Abbey Odorney, in Kerry, Munster; near the river Brick, 141 m. from Dublin. Abbey-Shrule, in Longford, Leinster.

ABBIANY, a town on the coast of Guinea.

Abbington, near Northampton. Abbington, near Royston, Cambridg. Abbington Magna, and Parva, near Linton and Bournbridge, Cambridges. Abborn, or Auburn Chapel, on the E coast of Yorks. 10 m. from Flamborough. Abbots, or Apewood Castle, in Staffords. situated on a lofty round promontory, and a steep ridge of hills, extending a mile in length, having hollows cut in the ground; it is supposed to have been one continued fortification of the ancient Britons, the hill at each end having been a kind of bastion. It is in the parish of Seisdon, 7 m. from Wolverhampton. Abbots Anne, near Andover, Hants.

Abbots Beckington, on the river Towridge, Devons.

ABBOTS BROMLEY, PAGETS BROMLEY, or BROMLEY-ABBEY, a town in Staffords. 6 m. E of Stafford, and 129 NW of London. Market on Tues.

ABBOTSBURY, a town of Dorset, 10 m. SW of Dorchester, and 127 W by S of London, where there is a very large swannery. The town consists of 3 streets in the form of the letter Y. Its chief trade is fishing. Market on Thurs.

ABERDEEN, the capital of Aberdeens. is the third city in Scotland for trade, extent, and beauty. It is formed of the Old and New towns; the former, about a mile N of the New, is situated on the Don, having a lofty Gothic bridge of one arch, resting at each extremity on two rocks; the latter is on the Dee, over which river is a bridge of seven arches. There is good anchorage in the bay, a harbour in each river, and mineral wells. The situation is hilly; it has a spa and baths. Its university, consisting of King's College in the Old Town, and Marischal College in the New, has produced many learned men. The manufactures are stockings, cottons, thread, &c. which they export, together with excellent salmon, oat-meal, and pickled pork, &c.; besides the coasting trade, vessels are sent hence to France, Spain, Portugal, and the northern states of Europe; the inhabitants, including the Old Town, are 21,639. A strong pier, forming an excellent harbour for vessels of moderate size, was erected some years ago, under the direction of Mr. Smeaton, on the N side of the harbour of New Aberdeen. This pier is 1200 feet in length, and gradually increases in thickness and height as it approaches to the sea, where the head, or rounding, is 60 feet in diameter at the base, and the perpendicular elevation 38 feet. To the S of the bar, there is a depth of 17 fathoms at low water; and at the harbour mouth from 8 to 9 fathom, where they had formerly but a few feet. The whole is built of granite, the most durable stone known; and many of the outside stones are above three tons in weight, with hewn beds. Aberdeen is 84 m. NE of Edinburgh. Lat. 57 6 N lon. 1 50 W.

ABYSSINIA, called also HIGHER ETHIOPIA, and by the Arabians, ALHABASH, a very ancient kingdom or empire in Africa. It is bounded on the N by Nubia, on the E by the Red Sea and Adel, on the S and W by Ajan, Alba, Gingiro, and Gorum; lies between 6 and 20 degrees N lat. and 26 and 44 E lon. It is about 900 m. long and 800 broad, and contains 378,000 square miles. The mountains are very high, and scattered all over the country: in some parts they are so steep, that the inhabitants ascend them by ladders, and draw up the cattle with ropes: among these the Nile and the Niger have their source; and here, as in Egypt, they have periodical inundations, which greatly fertilize the plains. The thunder and lightning here are sometimes tremendous, and the winds no less dreadful, overturning the houses and tearing up trees by the roots; and the rain comes down like torrents. Their rainy season holds for near six months, during our summer months, and is succeeded by an equal period of cloudless sky. Gold, silver, and copper, are found here in their mines; the vegetables are various; the animals are the lion, leopard, elephant, rhinoceros, dromedary, camel, stag, horse, cow, goat, sheep, monkeys, &c.; with a great variety of birds, as the ostrich, eagle, vultures, storks, &c.; and in the rivers there are found the crocodile and hippopotamus. The complexions of the inhabitants are copper-coloured, olive, and black; their religion is a mixture of Judaism and the profession of the Greek church; their language is Ethiopic, bearing an affinity to the Arabic.

ACHEM, or ACHEEN, the capital of a large kingdom of the same name, in the NW part of Sumatra; and the place where English ships first arrived at, in sailing to the E. Indies. Chinese, Indian, and European merchants live there, and exchange with the natives their different wares for gold-dust, elephants' teeth, fruits, sulphur, camphor, rice, cotton, pepper, and benzoin. The houses are built on posts two feet above the ground, because in the rainy season the city is so overflowed, that the inhabitants are obliged to go from house to house in boats; their public buildings are, the king's palace, and the mosques. The city, which in the 16th century was a great and flourishing mart of eastern commodities, and still retains a considerable commerce with the coasts of Coromandel, is situated about half a league from the sea, on a pretty large river, with a safe and commodious harbour, or rather road, formed by the islands at the point or mouth. The Achanese are, in general, taller, stouter, and of darker complexion than the other Sumatrans; they are more active and industrious, discover more sagacity and penetration, and are accounted the most dishonest people in all the east. They are Mahometans. Lat. 5 22 N lon. 95 34 E.

ACRA, ACRE, or ST. JEAN D'ACRE, a seaport of Palestine, called in scripture Accho, and by the Greeks Ptolemais: it underwent, in the time of the crusades, many sieges by the Christians and Saracens; and lately it has successfully sustained a memorable siege, under the French general Bonaparte. The fortifications, however, whatever they were in former times, consist, at present, only of a few low towers, mounted with rusty cannon towards the sea; and on the land side, of a wretched garden wall, without any ditch. The bay, or harbour, extending in a semicircle of 3 leag. as far as Mount Carmel, is open to the NW winds; yet the port is reckoned one of the best, and the town is one of the principal ones, upon this dreary coast. Here Edward I., when prince, receiving a wound from a poisoned arrow, was cured by his queen Eleanor, who sucked out the poison. The Armenians and European merchants have their respective places of worship here, and carry on a profitable trade with the Arabs. It is 28 m. S of Tyre. Lat. 32 30 N lon. 35 24 E.

Acton, Kent, in Charing. Acton, Staff. Acton Beauchamp, 10 m. from Worcester. Acton Burnell, Shrops. 8 m. from Shrewsbury; so named from the Burnells, who formerly had a castle in it. A parliament was held here in the reign of king Edward I. wherein a statute, called the Statute Merchant, was made for the assurance of debts. The lords sat in the castle, and the commons in a barn, which is yet standing. A great part also of the castle, a very magnificent structure, still remains, its walls being exceedingly strong, and adorned with fine battlements, and rows of windows curiously carved. The building is square, and it is supposed to have suffered less, from the injury of time, than any other of the kind in England. Acton, East, 4 m.; Acton, West, 5 m. from London, in Middlesex, on the road to Uxbridge. At the distance of half a m. from E. Acton are three wells, that afford a purging water, noted for the pungency of its salt. These, about the middle of the last century, were in the highest repute for their medicinal virtues; the assembly room was then a place of very fashionable resort, and the neighbouring hamlets of E. Acton and Fryar's Place were filled with persons of all ranks, who came to reside there, in the summer months. But fashion and novelty having given the preference to other wells, these have, long ago, lost their celebrity; and the assembly-room, nearly in ruins, has been lately repaired and converted into tenements. Acton Grange, Chesh. near the Mersey. Acton, Chesh. near Northwich. Acton, Chesh. near Namptwich. Acton, Cumb. 8 m. from Carlisle. Acton, near Northampton. Acton, Shrops. near Purslow. Acton, Staff. between the Trent and Severn. Acton, Higher, Glouc. near Wotton. Acton-Pigot, Acton-Reynold, and Acton-Scot, or on the Hill, Shrops. Acton Iiger, Gloucest. hamlet to Iron Acton. Acton, Round. a hamlet to Wenlock, Shrops. Acton-Trussel, Staff. Acton-Turville, Gloucest.

AFRICA, one of the four grand divisions of the globe, is bounded on the N by the Mediterranean, which separates it from Europe; on the NE by the Red Sea, which separates it from Asia, save where they are connected together by the isthmus of Suez; its other shores are washed by the Ocean. The greatest part of this immense peninsula, lies within the torrid zone; hence the inhabitants are all of dark complexions, and in the centre and southwards quite black. The mountains and rivers of Africa are very large; the country is extremely fertile, except in those extensive tracts that are unsupplied with moisture; there the country is parched up, and the heat becomes insupportable. In crossing these arid deserts, the sands are sometimes so raised by the winds, that whole caravans are buried under them: yet the fertile parts are very luxuriant, and the landscape, continually clothed with all the beauties of spring, summer, and harvest; the variety of animals is much greater here than in the other parts of the globe. It may be divided as follows: Morocco, Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli, Barca, Egypt, Biledulgerid, Zaara, Negroland, Guinea; Upper Ethiopia, including Nubia, Abyssinia, and Abex; Lower Ethiopia, Loango, Congo, Angola, Benguela, Matamam, Ajan, Zanguebar, Monomotapa, Monoemugi, Sofala, Terra de Natal, and Caffraria. ALEPPO, a city of Syria, seated on a small stream of fresh water, called Heylan, 170 m. N 05 E of Damascus, and 60 m. from the sea, called by the natives Haleb, and anciently Berœa, is the capital of a province and residence of a pacha, and only yields to Constantinople and Cairo in extent, population, and riches; in buildings, however, it is inferior to neither. The inhabitants are computed, by some travellers, at 235,000, of whom 200,000 are Turks, 30,000 Christians, and 5000 Jews; but this computation is thought to be large. The language generally spoken is vulgar Arabic; but the Turks, Armenians, Syrians, and Jews, in conversing with those of their own nation, use their respective languages. The Christians have their houses in the suburbs, and carry on a considerable trade in silks, camlets, Turkey leather, &c. Several European nations have factories and consuls, which are much respected here. Considered as a commercial city, Aleppo is the great emporium of this part of the world, communicating by caravans, with Persia, Egypt, Mecca, and Constantinople. Commerce is carried on here chiefly by barter. Each separate branch of trade has a particular street or market. The slaughter-houses are in the suburbs, open to the fields. Here are, besides, a great many stately mosques, with lofty spires, adorned with fountains and reservoirs of water, and churchyards and cemeteries well planted with most kinds of fruit. The streets are narrow, but well paved with large square stones, and kept very clean. The water in all the wells in the city is brackish; but good water is brought from some springs about five miles off, by an aqueduct, said to have been built by the empress Helena. Lat. 36 45 N lon. 37 [illegible].

ALEXAIN, a town of France, 7 m. SW of Mayenne.

ALEXANDRETTA, or SCANDROON, a town, or rather village, of Syria, the sea-port of Aleppo, from which it is distant about 70 m. W. The climate here is very unwholesome in summer, from a malignant intermitting fever; some ships having lost even their whole crews in a short time: while the heats are so excessive, many of the inhabitants retire to the neighbouring villages among the mountains, where they have excellent water, and delicious fruits. A traveller observes, that tombs are more numerous here than houses; the road, however, is the only one on the coast of Syria where vessels can anchor on a solid bottom. Lat. 36 35 N lon. 36 23 E.

ALEXANDRIA, or SCANDERIA, once a magnificent, rich, and celebrated city of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, near the most westerly branch of the Nile, soon after the overthrow of Tyre, about 333 years before the Christian æra. It was long esteemed the finest city in the world after Rome: we may form some idea of its inhabitants from the account of Diodorus Siculus, who relates that it had on its rolls in his time (45 years before the Christian æra) 300,000 freemen. The celebrated library, which was founded here by Ptolemy Soter, and placed in the temple of Serapis, containing in his time 400,000 volumes, and by addition of his successors 700,000, was, in 642, destroyed by order of the Saracen kalif, who became master of the city. The Saracen general who took it, said in his letter to the kalif, that he found in it 4000 palaces, 4000 baths, 40,000 Jews who paid tribute, 400 royal circi, and 12,000 gardeners, who supplied the city with all kinds of herbs in great plenty. At present it does not contain above 12,000 or 14,000 inhab. a mixture from different nations, as well as from various parts of the Turkish empire. The Christian Copti, Greeks, and Armenians, are very numerous here; the Europeans all pass under the name of Franks. Although Alexandria is now so much decayed, that the rubbish in some places overtops the houses, yet there are still some remains of its ancient splendor, particularly Pompey's Pillar, and two obeliskes of hieroglyphics. The ancient Pharos, a watch-tower, so famous in antiquity that it was numbered among the seven wonders of the world, is now turned into a castle, called Pharillon, and is still used to direct vessels into the harbour. This city was a place of great trade, before the Portuguese discovered the passage to India by the Cape of Good Hope, the commodities of the East Indies being deposited here on their way to Europe by the Red Sea. Lat. 30 21 N lon. 31 11 E.

ALGIERS, a country of Africa, extending about 500 m. in length from E to W, and from 40 to 100 in breadth, along the Barbary coast; has Mount Atlas on the S, Tunis on the E, and Morocco on the W. The Turks, who are not above 7000 in number, have the government in their hands, and the Moors, or natives, have no share in it. It is a kind of republic, under the protection of the grand seignor, and is governed by a sovereign, or dey, who seldom undertakes any thing of importance without the counsel of the Janizaries. The Arabs, who live in tents, are a distinct people, governed by their own laws, though the Turks interfere when they think fit. The dey is absolute in some respects, although he is elected by the Turkish soldiers, and frequently deposed and put to death by them. The revenues of the government rise from the tribute paid by the Moors and Arabs; and the prizes they take, or the piracies they commit at sea, sometimes equal the taxes they lay upon the inhabitants. The stems of the vines here are so large, that a man can hardly grasp them with his arms, and the bunches of grapes are a foot and a half long. The natives are strong and of a tawny complexion; their religion is Mahometanism, and their language a dialect of the Arabic: they also use that jargon, composed of the French, Italian, and Spanish languages, called Lingua-Franca, which prevails along the shores of the Mediterranean.

ALGIERS, a large town of Barbary, and capital of the country of Algiers. It is built on the declivity of a hill, and is of the form of an amphitheatre, next the harbour, so that the houses, appearing one above another, make a very fine appearance from the sea. The tops of the houses are all flat, and the people walk on them in the evenings, to take the air, being covered with earth, and used as gardens. The streets are very narrow; the adjoining country, however, is adorned with gardens and fine villas, watered with fountains. The mole of the harbour is 500 paces in length, extending from the main land to a small island. The number of inhabitants is said to consist of 100,000 Mahometans, 15,000 Jews, and 4000 Christian slaves. Algiers is situated opposite Minorca, 380 m. W of Tunis. Lat. 36 49 N lon. 2 18 E.

ALLEGANY or APALACHIAN MOUNTAINS, a chain or range of mountains in N. America, which extend north-easterly and south-westerly, nearly parallel with the coast of the southern states, through which they run. They occupy a space of about 900 m. in length, and from 60 to 200 in breadth, eastward of the Missisippi and the Five Lakes; that is, from Hudson's River to Georgia. The different ridges which compose this immense range have different names in different states; as, the Kittatinny, the Blue, the North, and South Mountains. They are not confusedly scattered and broken, rising here and there into high peaks, over-topping each other, but stretch along in uniform ridges, scarcely half a mile high, spreading towards the south. Some of them terminate in high perpendicular bluffs; others gradually subside into a level country, giving rise to the rivers which run southerly into the Gulf of Mexico.

In the back parts of Pennsylvania, scarce one acre in ten of this range is capable of culture; in other parts, extensive tracts of fine arable and pasture land intervene between the ridges, having generally a rich black soil, and some of the mountains will admit of cultivation almost to their tops.

ALPS, the highest mountains in Europe, being about 2 miles in perpendicular height, dividing Italy from France, Switzerland, and Germany. They have several names. The Maritime Alps extend from Vado as far as the source of the river of the same name, or even the Po; the Cottian Alps, from the source of the Vado to the city of Susa; the Grecian Alps, from the city of Susa to the mountain of St. Bernard; the Peunian Alps, from Mount St. Bernard to Mount St. Gothard; by the latter are bounded the Rhetian Alps, which extend to the source of the river Piave; and, lastly, the Norician, or Carnician Alps, extending themselves from the Piave as far as Istria, and the source of the Sau or Saave. The Alps have but few passes, and those difficult of access; Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, attempting those on the side of Piedmont, when he invaded Italy, lost most of his elephants; he accomplished his purpose, however, by making his way with aceis; not with vinegar (as it has been erroneously translated) for dissolving the snow, but with hatchets for cutting it away. The prospect from many parts of this enormous range of mountains is extremely romantic. The Glaciers of the Alps are immense masses of ice, lodged upon the gentler declivities of the mountains, and exhibiting the most grotesque and fantastic representations. From the valley of Chamouni there is a view of a vast chain of mountains, inaccessible, and covered with ice, and of Mont Blanc above the rest, whose top seems to reach and even pierce the highest region of the clouds. The chain, upon which this mountain seems to look down, like a giant, is composed of masses of rocks which terminate in pikes or spires, called the Needles, and which seem ranged like tents in a camp. Their sides are covered with fretted streaks of ice and snow.

ALPS, LOWER, a department of France, including part of the late province of Provence, is so called from its vicinity to the mountains of the same name. Digne is the capital.

The rajah lives very splendidly, and maintains 12,000 horse and 50 elephants. Amadabat is pleasantly situated, has 12 gates, and is surrounded by a wall flanked with towers. The royal square, 700 paces long, and 400 broad, (planted round with palm, date, orange, and citron trees,) is formed by the castle, of itself as large as a little town, the courts of judicature, palaces, and the grand caravansera for lodging strangers and travellers. Besides smaller mosques, here are 30 large ones, one of them being very magnificent; also 16 pagodas, one of which was converted into a mosque by Aurengzebe, who ordered a cow to be killed in the temple, being assured that the Gentoos, considering it as polluted, would never enter it again. Here the Armenians, Abyssinians, and Jews, have their respective places of worship; and the English and other European merchants have their factors, and purchase fine chintz, calicoes, and other Indian merchandise. It lies 120 m. N of Surat, and 40 NE of Cambaya. Lat. 23 10 N lon. 72 22 E.

AMADAN, or HAMADAN, a considerable town of Irak-Agemi, Persia, where the Jews are pretty numerous; they flock here in pilgrimage, to visit the tombs of Mordecai and Esther, which they allege to be here. These tombs are in the place which serves them for a synagogue. It is 85 m. NW of Ispahan. Lat. 35 15 N lon. 47 4 E.

AMADANAGAR, or ANDANAGAR, a rich and populous town in the Deccan, Hindoostan, situated 120 m. E of Bombay. Lat. 18 10 N lon. 74 15 E.

AMADIA, a trading town and fortress of Curdistan, in Persia, situated on a high mountain.

AMAK, an island in the Sound, about 4 m. long, and 2 broad. It contains 6 villages and 2 churches, is laid out in gardens and pastures, and supplies Copenhagen with milk, butter, and vegetables. It is connected with the city by bridges, one of which is a mile and a half long, and half a mile in breadth; a part of the city, called Christianshafen, standing on it. The inhabitants, who are between 3 and 4000, retain the old national habit, first brought here by a colony of E. Frieslanders; it resembles the habit of the ancient Quakers, as represented in the Dutch and Flemish prints.

AMAL, a town of Dalard or Thalland, in Sweden, on the Wenner Lake. It has a good harbour, and carries on a considerable trade in timber, deals, and tar.

AMALFI, a sea-port of Principato Citr. situated on the bay of Salerno. Flavio Bembo, a native of this place, is said to have invented the mariner's compass, about the beginning of the fourteenth century. It is 10 m. SW of Salerno.

AMBOYNA, the chief of the Molucca Islands, remarkable for the quantity of cloves and nutmegs it produces. The natives wear large whiskers, and their dress is only a piece of light stuff wrapped round their middle. The English and Dutch had factories here, by mutual agreement, at the beginning of the 17th century; but the Dutch, with a perfidy and atrocious barbarity, which will stain their annals to the latest ages with indelible infamy, expelled the English by force, and tortured and put to death many of them, pretending that they had entered into a conspiracy with the Chinese against them. Since that time, the Dutch have possessed the entire dominion of the Spice Islands, and excluded the rest of the world from trading there. The English, however, have taken them in the present war, and have now a number of troops in each of their forts; particularly in Fort Victoria, a place so strong, by nature and art, as to be, in a manner, impregnable. Lat. 4 0 S lon. 127 20 E.

AMBRAS, OMBRA, a town and fortress of Tyrol, in Austria, 2 m. SE of Inspruck, which was, as its name (shade) rather imports, a summer retreat for the archdukes. The statues, medals, treasures of gold, precious stones, and rarities, in the museum here, are immense. There is also the trunk of an oak, inclosing the whole body of a deer, supposed to have perished in the snow, and to have been covered with the mud and wreck of the trees, &c. washed from the mountains by the thaw. The tree, thus deposited, and taking root, inclosed with its roots the body of the animal, and, in its further growth, raised the body up with it. Here is also a good library, and a gallery of busts and admirable paintings.

AMBRESBURY, or AMESBURY, an ancient town in Wilts, on the Avon, consisting of two streets that intersect each other, 6 m. from Salisbury, and 80 m. from London. The celebrated Stonehenge is at the distance of 2 m. from hence. Market on Frid.

AMELIA, a county of Virginia.

Amerden-Hall, Essex, near Audley-End.

AMERICA, the largest of the four grand divisions of the globe, is bounded on all sides by the ocean, and stretches, in its extensive range, through every inhabited latitude or climate in the world; and the waters on its northern extremity seem to be bound up in everlasting frost. The parts that have a vertical sun, are so near the sea, or the lofty Andes, constantly covered with snow, that they experience not the excessive heats of Africa; and the complexion of the natives, or aborigines, is by no means very dark; it is generally of a reddish or copper colour, from the Straits of Magellan to the borders of Hudson's Bay. This immense continent is divided into N. and S. America, which are joined by the Isthmus of Darien. Its mountains, rivers, and lakes, are the largest in the world. America took its name from Americus Vespucius, a Florentine, who having accompanied Ojeda, a Spanish adventurer, thither, and drawing up an amusing history of his voyage, insinuated therein, that he had first discovered that continent. The discovery of America was made so lately as 1491, by Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, a bold adventurer, a patriot, and a man of humanity. At that time, the authority of the pope, over the whole world, was generally acknowledged throughout Europe. He had granted to the Portuguese, all the lands, islands, &c. they had discovered, or might discover, to the eastward of the Azores; hence the other Europeans were deprived of the advantages of the trade to the East Indies, by the Cape of Good Hope, which the Portuguese had but lately discovered. The costly articles of the East, which had heretofore come through the Red Sea and Mediterranean, and afforded to the Genoese a lucrative trade, were now brought by the Cape of Good Hope. Columbus saw, with concern, the loss his country had sustained, and concluding the earth to be round, proposed to evade the force of the pope's bull, by sailing to India by a western course. They treated his schemes as the reveries of a madman; he tried other courts of Europe with similar success, till at length Isabella, queen of Spain, sold even her jewels to fit him out for the expedition. America furnishes most of the vegetable and mineral productions to be found in the other parts of the world, with a variety of valuable drugs and other commodities, which were unknown here before its discovery. The animals on the north are much the same all round the pole, but, in the southern parts of America, they are generally more diminutive and feeble; and some tribes there are, which, if ever they existed in the old world (as Europe, Asia, and Africa are called), have there become extinct, while the most strong and savage quadrupeds seem not to have ever arrived here. Nearly the same variety of birds is found in the new world as in other parts, but some there are that are peculiar to the climate. America may be divided into Indian Nations, United States, and European Colonies. The countries possessed by Great Britain, are Labrador, or New Britain, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Surinam taken in the present war. The thirteen United States comprehend New Hampshire, including the province of Main, Massachusetts, Rhode-Island, and Connecticut in New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Vir-

Formerly it was called Tanglim; and some have supposed it to have been the seat of the Angli, mentioned by Tacitus; some of whom removed from thence to the Elbe, and afterwards to S. Britain.

Ancliff, Lancas. 2 m. from Wigan, has a curious spring, called the burning well; which, on putting a lighted candle to it, immediately catches fire, with a heat strong enough to make a pot boil, though the water itself still remains cold. Ancoates, Lancas. 1 m. from Manchester.

ANCOBER, or RIO CORBE, a territory of Guinea, between the gold coast and the country of Axim, and a river of the same name flowing through it, the banks of which are adorned with fine lofty trees. On the western bank is a populous village. Lat. 4 48 N.

ANCONA, anciently ANCON, a district and considerable sea-port in Italy on the Adriatic Sea, 116 m. NNE of Rome, having Umbria on the S and Urbino on the W. It is erected on the ruins of the ancient mole raised by the emperor Trajan, and is above 2000 feet in length, 100 in breadth, and about 60 in depth, from the surface of the sea. Near this stands the Triumphal Arch of Trajan, which, next to the Maison Quarrée at Nismes, is the most beautiful and entire monument of Roman magnificence existing. Here Clement XII. erected a lazaretto, which advances a little way into the sea, in the form of a pentagon, and is an elegant as well as useful edifice. The harbour is safe and commodious, and has considerable trade. The Jews have a synagogue here, and are established in great numbers. Lat. 43 38 N lon. 13 35 E.

ANDES, or CORDILLERAS, a chain of mountains, or rather two huge ridges, running almost the whole length of S. America, from the Isthmus of Darien to the Straits of Magellan, through Peru and Chili, a distance of 5000 m. and in a line parallel to, and but a little distance from the Pacific Ocean. They are also the loftiest, as well as the most extensive range of hills in the whole world. Even the plains of Quito, which may be considered as a base of the Andes, is elevated farther above the sea, than the top of the Pyrenees; and, in different places, they rise more than one third higher than the Peak of Teneriffe, heretofore accounted the highest part of the whole earth. The Andes may literally be said, to hide their heads in the clouds: the storms often roll, and the thunders burst below their summits; which, though exposed to the rays of the sun, in the centre of the torrid zone, are covered with everlasting snows. From experiments made with a barometer, on the mountain of Cotopaxi, it appeared, that its summit was elevated 6252 yards, which is something more than 3 geographical miles, above the surface of the sea. These mountains give rise to the largest rivers in the world: and when the volcanos, which are numerous here, break out among the snows, the sudden thaws produce such torrents of water, as to deluge the plains, and carry off the inhabitants, both man and beast.

ANDREW, ST. an island, and a town of Hungary.

ANDREW'S, ST. a town and royal borough of Fifes, formerly the metropolis of the Pictish kingdom. It is seated on a bay, on the level top of a small hill, commanding a view of the German Ocean. The cathedral, once a large Gothic structure, founded in 1161, and 157 years in building, was so completely demolished in one single day, by John Knox and his adherents, that little of it now remains. The university, founded by the bishop Wardlaw, in 1411, consists of 3 colleges, the Old College, St. Leonard's, and the New College, and has produced many learned men. The houses, though built of stone, are gone to decay, there being no manufactures here, except the trifling one of golf-balls, which, however, maintains a great number of people; and the harbour, which has suffered greatly by the encroachment of the sea, is only an artificial one, formed by piers, with a narrow entrance. It is 38 m. NE of Edinburgh, and contains 4600 inhab.

ANDREW'S, ST. a town in Nova Scotia.

ANGLEN, or ANGELEN, a tract of country in Sleswick, from 16 to 20 m. in length, and little less in breadth, lying between Flensburg and Sleswick. It is subject, for the most part, to the duke of Sleswick Gottorp. This country is supposed to have been the aboriginal seat of the Angli, or Angles, who joining with the Saxons, when called in to assist the Britons, in process of time became masters of the country, and gave it the name of England.

ANGLES, a town in the depart. of Herault.

Anglesborough, in Limerick, Munster.

ANGLESEY, or ANGLESEA, ISLE OF, the most western county of North Wales, through which the packets regularly pass between London and Dublin. It was called by the ancients

Mona, and was the seat of the Druids, of whom there seem to be some monumental remains, in the erections of huge stones, singly and collectively, in circles, and one upon another, as at Stonehenge: they are without any inscription to show the time or occasion of their erection. There are also found some Roman and other antiquities. This island is separated from Carnarvons. by a long and narrow strait, called Menai, which in some places, however, is fordable at low water. It is about 24 m. long and 14 broad; contains 74 parishes, 7300 houses, and 37,045 inhab. It is a fertile spot, has some valuable quarries, and a very rich copper mine on Parys Mountain.

Anglesey Abbey, Camb. near Botsham. Angleton, Suss. near Lewes. Angmering, E. and W. Suss. two small villages on the English Channel, near Arundel.

ANGOLA, a fertile kingdom of Lower Guinea, or Congo, situated between the rivers Dande and Coanza. It is bounded on the N by Congo Proper, on the E by Matamba, on the S by Benguela, and on the W by the Ocean. It produces Indian corn, beans, oranges, lemons, and several other fruits. The country is divided among several petty princes; and the Portuguese have several settlements on the coast. Polygamy is allowed in this country, and they practise circumcision. They seem to be an amiable and peaceful people: they are tall, and are reckoned to be elegant figures, and very handsome; and from the fertility of the soil and the simplicity of their manners they live very much at their ease: it is perhaps from this circumstance, that these injured people, when carried into slavery, show an impatience of fatigue and an independency of spirit superior to those from the Gold Coast, where the soil is barren, and where they have been accustomed to hardship and labour. The ourang outang is a native of this country. Angola is situated between 9 and nearly 12 degrees S lat. and between 10 and 20 E lon.

ANGORA, or ANGOURA, anciently ANCYRA, a town of Natolia, in Asiatic Turkey, 212 m. SE of Constantinople, remarkable for its remains of antiquity; as inscriptions, pillars, ruins of temples, &c. of porphyry and old marble. The castle, which is as large as a small town, and well inhabited, both by the Christians and Turks, is built of white marble and stone resembling porphyry; and throughout the walls of the town, which are low, and those of the houses, which are generally built of unburnt brick, antique fragments are interspersed. The city of Angora is computed to have 100,000 inhab. 90,000 of whom are Turks, and about 1000 of these are janizaries; Greeks, Armenians, &c. compose the remainder. The country produces very good red wine, and they have excellent rice on some of the rivers. They have the finest breed of goats here in the world; their hair or wool is quite white, and almost as fine as silk; a great trade is carried on in this article, and the finest stuffs, especially camlets, are made of it. The exports to England, Holland, and France, are about 1600 camel-loads yearly. Lat. 39 30 N lon. 32 5 E.

The harbour is good, and the town well built and populous; it has the privilege of sending a deputy to the cortes or states of Portugal. The English and Dutch have consuls here, though the commerce is inconsiderable; what they import is mostly wood, corn, and provisions. Lat. 38 38 N lon. 27 12 W.

Angram, a hamlet to Hutton Wamley, Yorks.

ANGROGNE, or ANGROGNA, a mountainous yet fruitful parish of Piedmont, through which runs a little river of the same name. It is accessible only by two passes, at the S and E, and there are retreats among the rocks, where, during the most violent persecutions against the Vaudois, their old barte, bards, as they are called, or valley-ministers, preached without interruption. Sometimes the valleys of Piedmont are called by the name of Angrogne. The town is 7 m. W of Pignerol.

ANGSO, a castle of Upland.

Angton, Sussex, near Arundel.

ANGUED, a province of Algiers, or rather a desert of Temecen. Hordes or clans of Arabs, and others, live here mostly on plunder, obliging travellers to pay them money for their passports, which are a kind of small flag at the end of a lance. They have but little corn, and they feed principally on dates, milk, and wild game. They range at pleasure about the country, acknowledging none but their own chief, and paying no tribute to the Algerines.

ANGUILLA, or SNAKE ISLAND, a woody, fertile, level tract, and the most northerly of the English Carribee Islands. It is about 30 m. in length and 10 in breadth; and there is good anchorage on the S side. Lat. 18 21 N lon. 63 W.

ANTWERP, a large, handsome city of Brabant. It contains 56,300 inhab. with a strong citadel, seated on the Scheldt, 22 m. N of Brussels, 22 NE of Ghent, and 65 S of Amsterdam. About 200 years ago it was the greatest place for trade in Europe; but the civil wars, that were the consequence of the tyranny of Philip II. diminished that commerce, which was almost annihilated in 1648, when, by the treaty of Munster, between Spain and the United Provinces, the navigation of the Scheldt to large ships, was shut. Upon the Seven United States of Holland being thus declared a free state, and the navigation of the Scheldt yielded to them, the Dutch built forts upon the river, to hinder all ships from coming up, except such as paid them custom, and after a time the trade was principally removed from Antwerp to Amsterdam, till then an inconsiderable town; but by the late revolution these restrictions are done away. The streets of Antwerp are large and regular, in number 212, besides which are 22 public squares: the harbour is very commodious, the river being 400 yards wide, and, at the time of high water, 12 feet deep; so that large vessels may come up to the quay; and, by the canals from the river, to the doors of the houses. The public buildings are very handsome, and, at least, 200 in number. The exchange cost 300,000 crowns. From this building sir Thomas Gresham took the model of the Royal Exchange, in London, as did the burghers of Amsterdam theirs. The town-house is a grand piece of architecture, and stands in the great market place. The house of the Hanse towns, built for the accommodation of the Oosterlingen, or eastern merchants from the Baltic, is a square building of stone. In the middle story, which has a gallery quite round the square, there are 300 lodging rooms: the cellars serve for stables.

ARA, a river of Spain, which joins the Cinca at Ainsa, in Arragon.

ARABIA, a country of Asia on the SW. It may be accounted a peninsula, being joined on the N to Syria; bounded on the NE by the river Euphrates, which divides it from Diarbeck. Diarbekar, the ancient Mesopotamia; on the E by the Gulfs of Persia and Ormus; on the S by the Indian Ocean; and on the W by the Red Sea, which separates it from Africa. It lies between 12 and 32 degrees N lat. and 35 and nearly 60 E lon. extending 1430 m. in length, and 1200 in breadth. It is divided, by Europeans, into Petrea, Deserta, and Felix; or the Stony, the Desert, and the Happy; but, by the Arabians themselves, into 6 provinces, viz. Hedjas, Yemen, Hadramaut, Oman, Lachsa or Hadsjar, and Nedsjid. Arabia Petrea is the smallest of the three, and towards the N very mountainous, having few inhabitants. This is the wilderness through which the children of Israel passed, in their journeying from Egypt to Canaan. In Arabia Deserta, the plains of sand are so immense, that travellers, in crossing them, are obliged to make use of the mariner's compass; and the tempests are not less terrible here than on the ocean. The air is excessively hot; springs or streams are scarcely to be met with; a pestilential vapour sometimes passes along, which instantly kills those who happen to inhale it; and when the wind rises high, the desert assumes the appearance of the most rough and tempestuous sea. The sand is lifted from its bed by the force of the winds, and driven along like waves, clouds, and rain; every thing that falls in its way is overwhelmed, and whole caravans of travellers, with their horses and camels, find one common grave in the deluge of sand. "In the general aspect of this desert region," says a modern traveller, "which is that of a vast plain, terminated on all sides by the horizon, the eye seeks in vain for some intervening object to rest upon; and after flitting over a dismal waste of sand, or scorched brambles, it returns to enjoy relaxation in the herds, and other property, with which the Arabian is surrounded. A deep and dismal silence reigns over this heavy landscape: no beast, no bird, no insect, is seen to diversify the sad uniformity of the scene." M. de P[illegible] observes that, in traversing the whole [illegible] Arabia Deserta, he saw "only 4 rabbits, 5 or 6 rats, 3 large and 7 or 8 small birds." "Here, indeed, all our ideas of deserts, as found in the poetical language of oriental tales, fall short of the truth! A stillness, like the silence of night, the faint remains of a breeze, still glowing with the fervour of the meridian sun, but sinking with his orb; an unbounded waste, covered with dark, grey sand, resembling the ashes of a furnace, and according with the raging heat of those regions; above, the vast canopy of heaven, across whose pale atmosphere no other object is seen, but the reddish disk of the sun dipt in the horizon, are circumstances which conspire to impress the mind of a spectator with an unpleasing melancholy." Along the banks of the Euphrates, however, where the land is fertilized, there are flocks of sheep, and large herds of cattle and camels. Ostriches, also, are found there in great numbers. The produce of Arabia Felix, which is by far the most considerable of the three provinces, is myrrh, aloes, cassia, frankincense, spikenard, manna, and other costly gums; cinnamon, dates, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, figs, and other fruits; honey and wax in plenty; and immense quantities of coffee. In a country so various, and of such extent, we may expect the manners of the inhabitants to vary. Those in the fertile parts have long been domesticated; to them we are indebted for many valuable discoveries; they have been our preceptors in chemistry and mathematical science; and first introduced in Europe the invention of the ten arithmetical figures. On the other hand, the Arabs in the Desert have no houses, but tents; they lead wandering lives, removing from place to place, partly for the sake of pasture, and partly to lie in wait for the caravans, which they often rob, as they travel over the Desert from Bussorah to Aleppo, and from Egypt to Mecca, the place of Mahomet's nativity.

ARACAN, or RECCAN, a fertile, but not a populous, country of Asia, on the NE coast of the Bay of Bengal, having Meckley on the N and Burmah on the E. It is governed by 12 princes, subject to the chief king, who resides in his capital, called also Aracan, a city about the size of Amsterdam; through which the large and beautiful river, Chaberis or Aracan, glides in many streams. Lat. 20 38 N lon. 93 E. His palace is very large, and contains, it is said, 7 idols of cast gold, two inches thick, each of a man's height, and covered with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones; and, in his stables, he has horses, elephants, lions, tigers, &c. They have only two seasons, the rainy and the fair; the rainy season is, while the sun is [illegible], or during our spring [illegible] the rest of the year is [illegible], buffaloes, and tigers, [illegible] articles of commerce [illegible] elephants' teeth; and [illegible] with diamonds, rubies, [illegible]. The inhabitants are [illegible] permitted among [illegible] flat foreheads, they [illegible] children's foreheads, [illegible] and accounting long [illegible] oad them with rings, [illegible] hang down to their shoulders.

ARCHANGEL, a sea-port of Russia, seated on the Dwina, 4 m. from the White Sea, which is frozen up for three months in the winter, but the rest of the year is open. The passage to it, through the N. Sea, was first discovered by capt. Richard Lane, an Englishman, in 1553, his ship being separated from the fleet of sir Hugh Willoughby, then on an expedition to discover a NE passage to China. Sir Hugh, with 70 men, perished in Lapland; Lane wintered here. On the English first entering the White Sea, they found a fishing-boat, the people in which, having never seen a ship before, fled before them; but, on a nearer approach, fell at their feet, and though they could hardly be persuaded to sell any thing without their prince's leave, gave them plenty of provisions for nothing. The English, from Elizabeth's time, had the exclusive privilege of trading here, and in the other northern ports of Russia, from Wardhus to the river Oby, till the death of Charles I. when the czar was so exasperated at their conduct, that he wholly deprived them of it; and since that time it has been open to all nations. The trade here is yet considerable, though it is greatly diminished since the building of St. Petersburg, from which it is distant 400 m. NE. Lat. 64 34 N lon. 39 0 E.

in Ulster, 7 m. NE of long range of build-called by the inhabithough they have no tra-
. It extends 250 feet in length, in breadth only 24; the thickness of the walls is 3 feet: it has three towers in front joined to it, one at each end, and one in the centre, constructed on a design uniform and elegant. It has been divided into 18 apartments below, and the same number above, with a staircase in the centre; each apartment on the ground floor had a small Gothic door, and a large square window, which seems to denote that they were shops or ware-rooms, occupied at some very early period, by merchants from foreign parts. Within 10 feet of the S tower of this building stands a square castle, called Horncastle, from the great quantity of ox, deer, and cow horns being found about it; it is 40 feet by 30, consists of two stories, and from the fireplaces and other marks, appears to have been the kitchen and dining-hall belonging to the merchants. Here are the remains of several other castles, towers, and gates, and within the NE point of Ardglass harbour, is a very curious and natural cave, with a large entrance on the shore. The duties of this port were let to farm, so lately as the beginning of the reign of Charles I.

ASIA, one of the four grand divisions of the globe, is situated between 25 and 180 degrees E lon. and extends nearly from the equator to the impenetrable regions of the Arctic Pole. It it 4740 m. in length, from the Dardanelles to the eastern shore of Tartary, and 4380 in breadth, from the most southern parts of Malacca, to the northern parts of Nova Zembla. Asia is bounded on the W by the Red Sea, the Mediterranean, the Black Sea, the Don, the Wolga, and an imaginary line extending from 54 to nearly 80 degrees N lat. on the N by the Frozen Ocean; on the E by the Pacific, and on the S by the Indian Ocean. From the richness of its soil, the deliciousness of its fruits, the fragrancy and balsamic quality of its plants, spices, gums, &c. the quantity, variety, beauty, and value of its gems, the fineness of its silks and cottons, and the richness of its metals, it has generally been considered as the finest quarter of the globe. It exhibits nearly every variety of animals. Asia contains Siberia, Eastern and Western Tartary, China, India, within and without the Ganges, Thibet, Persia, and the Turkish empire in Asia, which comprehends Georgia, Turcomania, Diarbeck, or Mesopotamia, Natolia, Palestine, Syria, and part of Arabia.

ASSAM, or ACHAM, a country of Asia, bounded on the W by Bengal and Bootan, on the N by the mountains of Thibet, and on the SE and S by Meckley. The river Burampooter flows through the whole length of it. Its capital is Gerghon. The natives are fond of the flesh of dogs. Almost every housekeeper has an elephant: they live comfortably, and as the king is the sole proprietor of all the gold, silver, and other metals found in this kingdom, they pay no taxes. The invention of gun-powder is ascribed to the Assamese. It was known in China and Hindoostan in very remote antiquity; and in the code of Gentoo laws, there is a prohibition of the use of fire-arms; but, perhaps, these fire-arms were only some sort of missive torches, and the powder very short in its effect of that which is made in latter times. Assam lies between 91 and 96 degrees of E lon. and between 25 and 28 N lat.

ASSANCALE, a strong town of Armenia, situated near the river Ares, 22 m. E of Erzerum, with walls built, in a spiral line, all round the rock on which it stands, and strengthened with square towers. The ditches are about 2 fathoms over, cut out of the hard rock.

ASTRABAT, a trading town of Persia, capital of a district, to which it gives name. It is situated on the mouth of a river, at the SE end of the Caspian Sea, 20 m. NE of Ispahan. Lat. 36 40 N lon. 72 10 E.

ASTRACAN, a territory in Asiatic Russia, including the N and part of the W side of the Caspian Sea, was formerly a kingdom, but is now divided into the governments of Causasus and Saratof.

ASTRACAN, a large and populous city, seated on an island formed by the river Wolga, 50 m. NW of the Caspian Sea, 900 m. SE of Moscow. It is surrounded by strong walls, and has an excellent harbour, where the Europeans embark for Persia. It is noted for having excellent fish. It seldom rains here, but the river on which it stands overflows, like the Nile; and when the water is run off, the grass grows in less than a month. From Astracan to Terki, on the side of the Caspian Sea, there are long marshes, which produce a vast quantity of salt, with which the Russians carry on a great trade. This city is supposed to have been, in very early times, the general staple for the productions of Persia, India, and Arabia. In the 14th century, when the Venetians were in possession of the trade of the Black Sea, they drew from this port, to their staple at Tanais, the Asiatic productions, with which they supplied the southern parts of Europe, while the articles designed for the north were conveyed partly along the Wolga, and partly by land-carriage, to Ladogo, on the Volkhouc, whence they were transported to Wisby, on the Isle of Gothland. The destructive expeditions of Tamerlane drove, for some time, the trade of Asia from this channel to that of Smyrna and Aleppo; and the discovery of the passage to India by the Cape of Good Hope, gave, to a great part of it, quite a different route. Astracan is still resorted to by many nations, and its trade with India, Persia, &c. is yet considerable. Lat. 46 22 N lon. 47 40 E.

ASTRENABAD, a town of Bengal, 30 m. E of Calcutta.

Astrop-Wells, Northamp. 3 m. from Banbury; noted for its mineral waters.

ASTURIAS, a province of Spain, 120 m. in length, and from 20 to 45 in breadth; bounded on the W by Galicia, on the N by the ocean, on the E and SE by Biscay and Leon, and on the S by Old Castile and Leon. It is divided into two parts, Asturia d'Oviedo, and Asturia de Santillana, and is mountainous and woody. Its wines, horses, and fruits are excellent, and it has mines of gold, lapis-lazuli, and vermillion. The eldest son of the king of Spain takes the title of Prince of Asturias, and bears the arms of the country.

Astwick, Yorks. 5 m. NW of Settle. Astwick, Herts, near Buntingford. Astwick, Bedf. near Biggleswade. Astwood, Bucks, near Newport. Aswardby, Lincolns. 5 m. NW from Spilsby. Aswardby, Lincolns. among the Fens.

ATACAMA, an inland town of Peru, on the borders of Chili, about 45 m. from the Pacific Ocean. Lat. 20 45 S 62 40 W. There is also a great desert of this name, and a chain of mountains which separates Peru from Quito.

Atford, Wilts, near Chippenham. Atforton, Heref. near Wigmore.

ATH, or AETH, a small but strong and populous town of Hainault, yielded to France by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1668, and then pretty regularly fortified by Vauban; it was restored, however, to the Spaniards by the treaty of Nimeguen in 1678. The French, under Mareschal Catinat, took it in 1697, but restored it in the same year by the peace of Ryswick. The allies, under Field-marshal d'Averque, took it Oct. 1, 1706; and Aeth remained in the possession of the Dutch till the year 1716, when it was given up to the emperor with the rest of the Spanish Netherlands. It is situated on the Dender, 9 m. NW of the Mons.

ATHBOY, a town of Meath, in Leinster, 3 m. SW of Trim, and 28 NW of Dublin.

Athelarton, Staff. near Penkridge. Athelhampton, Dorsets. E of Puddleton, near the river Frome. Athelney, Somersets. a river island, consisting of a rising spot of ground, formed by a conjunction of the Tone with the Parret, a few miles below Taunton. Here Alfred resided when the Danes over-ran England; as the floods of the rivers made this place inaccessible, and the firm ground then was not above 2 acres; and here he built an abbey.

Athelstoneford, in Haddington, Scotland, 4 m. from Haddington.

ATHENRY, a town of Galway, Connaught, 10 m. E of Galway, and 91 W of Dublin. It was formerly a place of considerable strength and note, there being numerous ruins hereabouts of churches and cathedrals, walls and towers.

ATHENS, a city of ancient and modern Greece, formerly capital of Attica, and celebrated for its learning and arts, it having been the principal academy of the Roman empire. It is now called Setines, or, according to Dr. Chandler, Athini, is situated in the Gulf of Engia, 100 m. NE of Lacedæmon, and 320 SW of Constantinople, and contains about 15,000 inhab. who are mostly of the Greek church, and speak a corrupt sort of Greek. It was taken by Mahomet II. in 1455, and is still under the dominion of the Turks; but there are many magnificent ruins, (particularly the parthenon or great temple of Minerva, in the acropolis or citadel, and the temple of Jupiter Olympus) which sufficiently testify its former grandeur. In its present state, Athens is a city or fortress, with a thick irregular wall, standing on the brink of precipices, and inclosing a large area, about twice as long as broad. Some portions of the ancient wall may still be discovered on the outside. The garrison consists of a few Turks, who reside there with their families, and are called by the Greeks Castriana. The rock of the acropolis is lofty, abrupt, and inaccessible, except the front, which is towards the Piræus. Lat. 38 5 N lon. 23 57 E.

ATHERDEE, a town of Louth, in Leinster, 34 m. NW of Dublin.

Atherington, Devons. near North Tawton. Atherley, or Adderley, Shrops. near Newport.

AZORES, TERCERAS, or WESTERN ISLES, a group of islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, between 25 and 32 degrees of W lon: and between 37 and 40 N lat. 900 m. W of Portugal, and as many E of Newfoundland. They are 9 in number, St. Maria, St. Michael, Tercera, St. George, Graciosa, Fayal, Pico, Flores, and Corvo. They were first discovered in 1439, by John Vanderberg, a merchant of Bruges, who was driven here by stress of weather. On his arrival at Lisbon, he boasted of his discovery; on which the Portuguese set sail, and took possession of them, which they have ever since retained. All these islands enjoy a very clear sky and salubrious air: they are extremely fertile in corn, wine, and a variety of fruits; and they breed large quantities of cattle. No venomous animal, it is said, is to be found here; and ships bound from Europe to America, on touching here, are immediately freed from the vermin that infested them. Geographers are not determined whether they belong to Africa, to America, or Europe. These islands are subject to earthquakes; perhaps it is to these dreadful convulsions that they owe their origin.

They lie between 4 and 5 degrees of S lat. and between 127 and 128 E lon. and are denominated the Nutmeg or Banda Islands, or Lantor, Pulorun, Rosingin, Poolaway, and Gonapi. The nutmeg, covered with mace, grows only on three of these islands, where there are whole forests of it. These islands are subject to earthquakes, and all very small, the largest, Banda, being scarcely 20 m. in length. They have been entirely subject to the Dutch ever since the year 1609, when they expelled both the English and the natives. They also keep unceasing war against the birds, which, swallowing the seeds whole, they fear might avoid them in other islands, in a state capable of vegetation; and they send out parties of their troops thither, on excursions, to discover and extirpate every appearance of the young plants. The island contains about 5000 inhab. The natives use the pith of the sago for bread; and the Europeans who are settled here import their provisions from Java, Macassar, or the very fertile island of Bali, as the land will not bring forth any kind of corn. Banda was taken by an English squadron, under rear-admiral Rainier, March 8, 1796. Lat. 4 50 S lon. 128 5 E.

BASLE, BISHOPRIC OF, a considerable principality in the circle of the Upper Rhine, having France on the W and the Sundgaw on the N. It extends from the Lake Bienne, across Mount Jura, almost to the city of Basil. The bishop is elected by 18 canons, and invested in his temporalities by the emperor.

BASLE, or BALE, the capital of the canton of Basil, in Swisserland, is surrounded by thick walls, flanked with towers and bastions. It is divided into two parts by the Rhine; the larger of which is on the side of Swisserland, the less on that of Germany; but they are joined by a handsome bridge. The larger has 5 gates, 6 suburbs, 200 streets, 6 large squares, and 40 fountains, and is partly seated on a hill. The other stands on a plain, and has but two gates, with 20 streets and some fountains. The townhouse and paintings are much admired, and the university has produced many celebrated scholars, as Oecolampadius, the Buxtorfs, father and son, Wenstein, Euler, the Bernouillis, &c. The library contains a prodigious number of books and manuscripts, and there is a rich collection of medals, among which are several exceedingly scarce. Basil is the largest, and seems to have been once the most populous town in Swisserland: it is capable of containing 100,000 inhab. whereas the number at present is scarcely more than 14,000. The art of making paper is said to have been invented here. They have several manufactories, particularly of ribbands, cottons, silks, stuffs, painted linens, gloves, and cutlery. The sumptuary laws are very strict at Basil, and no person is allowed to have a servant behind his carriage. In general the burghers' sons receive an excellent education; and it is not uncommon for even the poor sort of tradesmen, to employ their leisure hours in reading Virgil, Horace, Plutarch, &c. It is 175 m. N by E of Geneva, and 250 E by S of Paris. Lat. 47 45 N lon. 7 34 E.

BATAVIA, a handsome city of the isle of Java, formerly the capital store-house of all the Dutch settlements, and the residence of their governor-general in the E. Indies, but taken by the British in 1811. It contains 150,000 inhab. of different nations, but chiefly Chinese, who reside in a principal suburb. They have canals in the different streets, planted on each side with evergreen trees. The houses are mostly of stone, and elegantly built. Dutch is the current language of the Europeans, but the slaves and lower class use the Malay tongue; the days and nights are nearly equal throughout the year, the sun rising and setting about 6 o'clock. Batavia produces plenty of ship timber, and the shore is capable of forming the most extensive wet and dry docks. The harbour, at the mouth of the river Jucarro, is the most beautiful in the E. Indies; it is large, and the bottom is secure; but the air is very unwholesome, and the place has been represented by captain Cook as the grave of European navigators. The citadel has lofty thick walls, which commands the place of landing, besides other forts, redoubts, and a rampart, ditch, &c. round the town. Lat. 6 12 S lon. 106 53 E.

BATH, a city of Somers. 12 m. ESE of Bristol, and 107 W of London. Famous, from the times of the Romans, for its hot springs. They are not only used as baths, but internally as a medicine, and great benefits are derived from them in gouty, paralytic, bilious, and a variety of other cases. Bath is a place of such general resort, that it seems like a great national hospital; it is so far, however, from being a house of mourning, that it exceeds every other part of England in amusements and dissipation: its buildings are also more elegant and splendid. It is laid out in squares, circuses, crescents, terraces, &c.: these are constructed of white freestone, which abounds here, and are executed in an elegant style of architecture. It is seated on the river Avon; but, in its latter improvements, the buildings, rising one range above another, have nearly reached the summit of the hill, on the declivity of which it stands. The principal seasons of the waters are spring and autumn; and, besides the great infirmary, there are several other hospitals and alms-houses, for the relief and support of indigent patients. Considerable manufactures of cloth are carried on here. Market on Sat.

BATTEL, a town in Sussex, 6 m. NW of Hastings, 22 E of Lewes, and 57 SE of London. So named from an abbey, called Battel-Abbey, erected by the Conqueror, on the spot where the decisive battle was fought between Harold and William duke of Normandy, Oct. 14, 1066. The gatehouse of the abbey, (which was a stately pile, nearly a mile in circumference) remains almost entire, and serves for the sessions, and other public meetings. The town, which is low and dirty, consists of one good street, has a harbour for barges, and a manufacture of gunpowder, of considerable estimation among sportsmen. A weekly market on Thurs. for provisions, and every second Tues. in the month for cattle, corn, &c.

BIRMINGHAM, a large town in Warwicks. long noted for its hardware manufactures, stands on the side of a hill, 19 m. NW of Coventry, and 116 of London. It is no corporation, and therefore free for any person to settle there, which has greatly contributed to the increase, not only of the buildings, but of the trade, which is now no longer confined to small wares, but includes the more massive works of the founders, and also the improved steam-engines, by means of which, indeed, they carry on their heavier works, as they have not here any considerable stream of water. It contains 12,100 houses, and 61,000 inhab. exclusive of Aston, but their number is continually increasing, and the surrounding country, to a considerable distance, especially towards Wolverhampton, seems like a continued town peopled with industrious inhabitants. Birmingham, from the appearance of the houses, the bustle in the streets, and particularly from the continual passing of the stage-coaches, has much the resemblance of the metropolis. Its manufactures are sent to every quarter of the globe, and in cheapness and beauty are unrivalled. A navigable canal was completed from hence to the collieries at Wednesbury, in October, 1769. Market on Thurs.

BORNEO, an island in the Indian Archipelago, about 800 leagues in circumference, and divided into several states or kingdoms. It produces aromatic herbs, oranges, lemons, mangoes, pines, palms, &c. in great abundance, excellent mastic, and other gums, wax, rice, cassia, coffee, honey, cotton, camphire, frankincense, musk, aloes, agaric, brasil-wood, sapan, pepper, cinnamon, and other spices; diamonds and gold dust are found in their rivers and sands. Their animals are elephants, buffaloes, oxen, horses, tigers, leopards, bears, monkeys, deer, wild boars, goats, parrots, parroquets, and a great variety of beautiful birds; and they have plenty of sea and river fish. The inhabitants on the sea-coast are Mahometans; but in the interior parts, which are but little known, they are Gentoos. In 1772, the English obtained a grant from the Sooloos, of the N. part of the island. On the sea coast, and near the rivers, the land is usually overflowed half the year by the heavy and continual rains, for which reason some of the houses are built on floats, and others on high pillars. Borneo lies E of Sumatra and Malacca. The capital, of the same name, large, populous, and built on piles, with a good harbour, is seated on the NW. side of the island. Lat. 4 55 N lon. 111 27 E.

BORNOU, an extensive country, in the interior part of Africa, lying to the SE of Fezzan and Berdoa: between 16 and 20 degrees of N lat. having the desert of Bilma on the N, Nubia on the E, and Begarmee on the S. Two seasons divide their year. During our summer months they have intense heat, violent winds, deluges of rain, and dreadful tempests of thunder and lightning; but, during the winter of Europe, the ardent heat subsides, the air becomes soft and mild, and the weather serene. They have a great variety of animal and vegetable productions. They cultivate the ground with hoes, the plough being unknown. The country is said to abound in flocks, millet, and cotton, which last they manufacture and wear. Their religious profession is Mahometanism; their government a sort of elective monarchy. In their manners the people are courteous and humane.

BORNOU, the capital of the empire of Bornou in Africa, is situated on a flat country, on the banks of a small river, 650 m. SE. of Mourzouk. It is of greater extent than Tripoli; but the houses, though neat, are so irregularly placed, that they can hardly be said to form streets. Their mosques are constructed of brick and earth, and they have schools in which the Koran is taught, as in the principal towns of Barbary. Lat. 19 40 N lon. 25 30 E.

BORRODALE, in the SE. part of Cumberland, bordering on Westmoreland, a romantic valley among Derwent-Water falls. These falls or hills are some of the loftiest in England, and it is in one of them that the black lead, or wad, is found wherewith almost all the world is supplied: the mines are opened only once in seven years, and when a sufficient quantity of this valuable and singular mineral is taken out, they are carefully closed again. In travelling among these mountains, the idea that presents itself to the astonished spectator, is that of the earth having been in an uproar, like the ocean in a storm; the hills appear like waves rising one behind another, and were it not for the abrupt and sudden scarps, the immense masses of rugged rocks that give the idea of fixedness and stability, the bewildered fancy might be so lost as to imagine they were in a state of undulation, and ready to mingle with each other. The beautiful Vale of Borrodale is watered by the clearest brooks, which precipitated from the hills, and forming many beautiful waterfalls, meet together in the dale, and forming one large stream, pass out of the dale under the name of Borrodale-Beck, when its waters spread out into an expansive lake, containing several beautiful islands. This lake is called Derwent-Water, or Keswick Lake. Borrodale is 4 m. from Keswick; in passing from which, the traveller has the lake on his right hand, and stupendous rocky precipices on his left; huge stones, or rugged masses of rock, which have tumbled from above, lie scattered along his way. As he approaches the dale, he sees the ledges of the rocks covered with herbage, shrubs, and trees; villages and farms arise upon his view, the larger cattle are seen feeding in the lower grounds, and the sheep, in large flocks, upon the mountains.

It is bounded on the W by Paraguay and Amazonia; its other boundaries are formed by the great Atlantic Ocean. Here the Portuguese royal family has fled from the oppression of the tyrant of the Continent; and the daily increase of its population, extent of its trade, and improvement of cultivation and manufactures, promises that it will shortly become a great empire in the new world. It has 8 large cities, with episcopal sees, also a governor-general almost independent of the viceroy at Rio Janeiro. Those articles which were supplied from the mother-country, are now furnished from England; for which it returns valuable cargoes of silver, tallow, hemp, and skins. The air of this country is temperate and wholesome; the soil is fertile, producing immense quantities of sugar, also tobacco, brasil-wood, Indian corn, hemp, and several sorts of fruits and drugs; their beasts, birds, and fishes are various, and within the country there are gold and several sorts of precious stones. The Portuguese chiefly inhabit the coast. The residence of the viceroy, till of late years, was at St. Salvador, but is now at St. Sebastian. The natives are divided into several nations or tribes, as the Tupinamboes, Tobajaras, Petiguaras, Topayas, &c. and speak different languages. They are of a copper colour, BRISTOL, a city and sea-port, 40 m. nearly S of Hereford, 60 NE of Exeter, 34 SW by S of Gloucester, 13 WNW of Bath, and 124 W of London; partly in Gloucest. and partly in Somers. to which last it was accounted to belong, before it formed a separate jurisdiction. In wealth, trade, and population, it has long been reckoned the second in England; the custom-house receipts for Liverpool, however, have lately exceeded those of Bristol. It is seated at the confluence of the Avon and Frome, about 10 m. from the place where the Avon discharges itself into the Severn. Ships of considerable burden come up to the quays, and their trade is extensive; sending 2000 ships yearly to different parts of the world; and contains 64,000 inhab. The streets are mostly narrow, but here are some elegant squares, and the new parts of the town are magnificent, they are built of stone, and much in the same style as Bath. Like it, they also extend, range above range, till they have nearly reached the summit of the hill, against which the Gloucester side of the city stands. The prospects in the vicinity of Bristol are delightful, and the banks of the Avon, the lofty rocks, through which it finds a passage to the sea, covered with herbage and trees, and presenting the most awful precipices, are highly romantic. They have plenty of coal from King's Wood and Mendip Hills, and the glass-houses, foundries, sugar-works, &c. are numerous. They make use of sledges instead of carts, as a part of the town having been built upon a morass, carts and waggons are not allowed to ply there, from the apprehension of their shaking and endangering the buildings. A mile below the city are the hot-wells, much resorted to. Lat. 51 28 N lon. 2 36 W. Markets on Wedn. Frid. and Sat.

BROEK, a neat village, 6 m. from Amsterdam. The manners of the inhabitants, according to Madame de Sillery, and Mr. Pratt, are extremely singular. They marry invariably among themselves. In every house they have one door set apart for the occasion of marriage or death. It is called the door of ceremony; the new-married couples enter in at it, and never pass through it again but to their graves; in the interval it is kept constantly shut. The women scarcely ever stir from Broek, and Amsterdam is as little known to them as London or Constantinople. The houses are roofed with tiles so glossy, that in the sunshine they glitter like spar. Their little gardens are adorned with china vases, grottos of shell-work, &c. and their streets are paved with inlay work of beautifully small pebbles, of various forms and colours, squared or diamonded, crossed and intercrossed, with shells, pieces of glazed brick, marbles, glass beads, &c. called in as auxiliaries. Behind their houses and gardens are extensive meadows, with large herds of cattle grazing.

BRUGES, a large city of the ci-devant Austrian Flanders, formerly the English staple for wool, and the centre of communication between the Lombards and the Hanseatic merchants. Hither the Lombards brought the products of India, and the manufactures of Italy, and exchanged them for the commodities of the north. It was then the greatest trading town in Europe, every commercial nation of which had a consul here. But, in the 16th century, the civil wars, occasioned by the tyranny of Philip II. drove the trade first to Antwerp, and then to Amsterdam. Bruges is not therefore so populous, but it still commands some trade, as it communicates by canals with Ghent, Ostend, Sluys, Nieuport, and Dunkirk. It is 8 m. nearly E of Ostend.

It is now, however, a separate territory, and is bounded on the W and SW by Candahar and Sablestan, or Segestan; on the N by Usbeck Tartary; on the E by Cashmere; and on the S by Lahore. The country consists of mountains constantly covered with snow, hills of moderate height and of easy ascent, and of rich plains, and stately forests, enlivened by numerous streams. It produces every article necessary for human life, with a variety of delicate fruits and flowers. The city of Cabul is capital of the province. It is situated near the foot of the Hindoo-Ko, or Indian Caucasus, near the source of the Attock. Its situation is romantic and pleasant, having, within its reach, the fruits and products of the temperate and torrid zones. It has spacious caravanseras and palaces; and is 580 m. By this river it is divided from the country of the Hottentots: its other boundaries are uncertain. The Caffres are tall, active, and robust, and evince great courage in attacking lions and other beasts of prey. Their complexions are black; their clothing consists of hides of oxen, which are as pliant as cloth. The men employ much of their time in hunting, the women in cultivating the land; they also make earthen ware, and curious baskets. The country is fertile, and they have large herds of cattle, which are small, but very docile, coming at a whistle. They have no priests, yet undergo, at 9 years of age, the initiatory rite of the Hebrews. The interior parts are little known.

CAIRO, GRAND CAIRO, or EL KAHERA, the capital of Egypt, consists of 3 towns, about a mile apart, Old Cairo, or Mersa, New Cairo, and the Port of Bulac. The inhab. are about 300,000. Old Cairo is a small place, though it be the harbour for boats that come from Upper Egypt. New Cairo is about a mile from the river, and is 7 m. in circumference. It has 3 or 4 grand gates, but the streets are narrow, and the best houses are generally built round a court, having their windows within to the inclosed court, and presenting only a dead wall to the street. The calash is a canal which conveys the waters of the Nile into the city; it is about 20 feet broad, and has a house built on each side of it. Here are several public bagnios and caravanseras, and about 300 mosques, the lofty minarets of which present a very picturesque appearance. In the 15th century, this was one of the richest and most flourishing cities in the world; it has since declined, but the Europeans have still their consuls and factors here. It is seated near the E bank of the Nile, 100 m. S of its mouth. Lat. 30 3 N lon. 31 23 E.

CAITHNESS, the most northerly county of Scotland, bounded on the W by Sutherlandshire; on the N by the Pentland Frith, which divides it from the Orkney islands; and on the SE by the German Ocean. Its greatest extent is 35 m. from N to S and 20 from E to W. Contains a royal burgh Wick, and the town of Thurso, and 23,410 inhab. and sends a member to parliament alternately with Bute. The SW part is mountainous, and the abode of wild roes and other animals; the rocky summits shelter eagles, and other birds of prey, and the lakes are resorted to by swans, and various water fowl. On the SW this county ends in the promontory called the Ord of Caithness. Along the side of this steep hill, impending above the sea, a winding road has been cut, which is the sily entrance into this county from the S. The climate is good, and the soil round the coast very improvable: here the English is spoken; but in the Highlands the Erse prevails.

CAKET, a town and country in the northern part of Persia, near Mount Caucasus. Lat. 43 32 N lon. 46 10 E.

CALABAR, a county of Upper Guinea, with a town and river of the same name, where the Dutch have a factory.

CALABRIA, a country of Naples, divided into Ultra and Citra; or Farther Calabria, of which Reggio is the capital, having Calabria Citra on the N and the Mediterranean on the E, S, and W; and Hither Calabria, of which Cozenza is the capital, being bounded on the N by Basilicata, on the E by the Gulf of Tarento, and on the S by Calabria Ultra. It is rich in vegetable and mineral productions, but liable to earthquakes. One of the most terrible upon record happened here and in Sicily, in 1783. Besides the destruction of many towns, villages, and farms, above 40,000 persons perished by this calamity. Mountains were levelled, and valleys formed in an instant; new rivers began to flow, and old streams were sunk into the earth and destroyed; plantations were removed from their situations, and hills carried to places far distant. At Scilla, a wave, which had swept the country for 3 m. carried off, on its return, 2473 of the inhab.

CALAHORRA, a city of Old Castile, near the Ebro, on the borders of Navarre.

CALAIS, a sea-port town, in the depart. of Pas de Calais, 21 m. ESE of Dover, and 172 N of Paris, strongly fortified, and defended with a citadel: it contains 1 parish church, and between 4 and 5000 inhab. The streets are uniform and well paved. It is seated among marshes, has an inland navigation, and a harbour for small vessels. In time of peace, packet-boats sail twice a week between Dover and Calais. Lat. 50 58 N lon. 1 56 E.

CALCINATO, a town in the Bressan.

CALCUTTA, or FORT WILLIAM, the emporium of Bengal, and seat of the governor general of India, is seated on the W side of Hoogly River, at about 100 m. from its mouth, which is navigable up to the town for large ships. In the beginning of the present century it was a village, but now it is an extensive city, and contains about 700,000 inhab. The houses, variously built, some of brick, others with mud, and a greater number with bamboos and mats, make a motley appearance: and the mixture of European and Asiatic manners observed in Calcutta, is wonderful; coaches, phaetons, hackeries, two-wheeled carriages, drawn by bullocks, palanquins, carried by the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearance of the faquirs, form a diversified and curious scene. Here the governor general and council of Bengal reside, who have a control over the presidencies of Madras, Bengal, and Bencoolen. The houses have, many of them, the appearance of palaces, or temples, and their inhabitants are very hospitable. The situation of this city is not happily chosen; for it has extensive muddy lakes, and a vast forest close by it, from which, in so hot a climate, unwholesome vapours must arise. Here are four judges, who dispense justice according to the laws of England. Calcutta is 1030 m. NE by N of Madras. Lat. 22 33 N lon. 88 28 E.

Caldecot, Rutl. in the parish of Lydington. Caldecot, Monm. 6 m. from Chepstow. Caldecot, Bucks, in the parish of Newport. Caldecot, Yorks. near Leeds. Caldecot, 7 m. from Cambridge. Caldecot, Chesh. S of Cambridge. Can, a river in Essex. Can, Dorsets. SE of Shaftsbury.

CANADA, a country of N. America, N of the United States, extending about 700 m. in length, from NE to SW, and about 200 in breadth. It is subject to Great Britain, and the religious establishment is that of the church of Rome. By an act of Parliament, in 1791, the country was divided into Upper Canada, of which Montreal is the capital, which district contains 100,000 inhab. although 30 years back it was a mere forest; and Lower Canada, of which Quebec is the chief city, contains 200,000; and a constitution, partly resembling that of England, was given to each of these provinces. The winter here for 6 months is very severe, being often at 60 degrees below the freezing point; and the cold so intense, that Mr. Gray asserts his hands have been blistered by touching cold iron, in the same manner as when burnt by one hot. The cleared lands are very fertile, and the vegetables various, and corn ripens in two months' time, vegetation being always wonderfully accelerated where the season is short. Furs and skins are obtained here in great quantities, the Canadian merchants having, of late years, interfered greatly even with the Hudson's Bay Company, exploring numerous nations in-land, and sending many large canoes into the interior country. The rivers, lakes, and bays are numerous, large, and deep, and well supplied with fish. Here are several ancient and extensive forests, and the tribes of Indians are numerous.

CANAL, THE DUKE OF BRIDGEWATER'S, a stupendous work, begun in 1758, at Worseley Mill, 7 m. from Manchester, where, at the foot of a mountain, composed in a great measure of coal, a basin is cut, capable of containing the boats, and a great body of water, which serves as a reservoir to the navigation. The canal runs through a hill, by a subterranean passage, nearly three quarters of a mile to the duke's coal-works. In some places it is cut through the solid rock; in others arched over with brick. Air-funnels, some of which are 37 yards perpendicular, are cut at certain distances through the rock to the top of the hill. At Barton Bridge, 3 m. from the basin, is an aqueduct, which, for upwards of 200 yards, conveys the canal across the valley, and also more than 40 feet above the navigable river Irwell. There are 3 arches over this river; the centre one is 63 feet wide, and 38 high, admitting the largest barges to pass underneath with their masts and sails standing. At Longford Bridge, the canal turns to the right, and crossing the river Mersey, passes near Altringham, Durham, Grapenhall, and Kaulton, into the tide-way of the Mersey, at Runcorn Gap, whence the barges can pass into Liverpool at low water. This navigation is 29 m. in length; it falls 95 feet, and was finished in 5 years, under the direction of Mr. Brindley. Coals, which, before this canal was finished, were retailed in Manchester, at 7*d.* per hundred weight, are now sold (seven score to the hundred weight) at 3½d.

CANAL, THE GRAND TRUNK, or STAFFORDSHIRE CANAL, was begun in 1766, under the direction of Mr. Brindley, in order to form a communication between the Mersey and the Trent, and between the Irish Channel and the German Ocean. It is 92 m. in length, from the duke of Bridgewater's canal, at Preston-on-the-Hill, in Chesh. to Weldon Ferry, in Derbys. where it communicates with the Trent. It is carried over the river Dove in an aqueduct of 23 arches, and the ground is raised for more than a mile to a considerable height; it is also carried over the Trent by an aqueduct of 6 arches: at Harecastle Hill, it is conveyed under ground a mile and a half; at Barton, in Chesh. a subterraneous passage is effected of 560 yards in extent, and in the same neighbourhood another of 350: and, at Preston-on-the-Hill, where it joins the duke's canal, it passes under ground 1241 yards. From the neighbourhood of Stafford, a branch is made from this canal, to near Wolverhampton, and to join the Severn near Kidderminster; from this again two other branches are carried, one to Birmingham, and the other to Worcester.

CANAL, THE GRAND, in Ireland, commences in Dublin, at the west end of the town, and is intended to be carried to the river Shannon. It already communicates with the Barrow, whereby a communication is opened between the metropolis and Athy, Carlow, Ross, Waterford, Clonmel, &c. There are passage-boats daily from the city to Sallans, Monastereven, and Athy, and from these places to Dublin; and vessels carrying goods are continually passing and repassing. The execution of this work was an arduous business: besides having to cut through hard and rocky strata, and construct aqueducts over the valleys and rivers, they had to carry it through a long track of turf-bog, which, for a considerable time, baffled their efforts, as, from its fluid-like consistence, it was pressed into, or filled up, the cut or channel, whenever they ceased digging. These difficulties however, were surmounted; and the canal itself has proved such a drain to the bog, as to enable the people to reclaim a great extent of it, and bring it under cultivation. By a branch, which has been carried, at an immense expense, by a circuitous course round the S side of the city, the Grand Canal now communicates with the harbour of Dublin. There are other canals and modes of inland navigation by the rivers and lakes, both in the N and W of Ireland.

CANAL, THE GREAT, in Scotland, forms the long wished-for junction between the Forth and the Clyde. The bold design, conceived above a century ago, is now successfully executed upon a scale far above the usual dimensions of the largest canals in England, and admits of vessels constructed for foreign trade, provided the breadth of the beam be somewhat less than 20 feet, and their draught of water a little under 8. The extreme length of this canal, from the Forth to the Clyde, is 35¼ English miles. In the space of 20 m. it is carried over 36 rivers and rivulets, besides two great roads, by means of 38 aqueduct bridges. In the course of this inland navigation, which may be performed in less than 18 hours, many striking scenes present themselves to view. The above all others, the stupendous aqueduct bridge, over the Kelvin, near Glasgow, 400 feet in length, carrying a great artificial river over a natural one in a deep valley, where large vessels sail along at the height of 70 feet above the bed of the river below, is one of the features of this stupendous work, which gives it a pre-eminence over any of a similar kind in Europe. Yet, however singular and striking this may appear, with respect to picturesque beauty, the utility of this communication between the Eastern and Western Sea to navigation and commerce, is a more important consideration, as it shortens the nautical distance 800, and, in some cases, 1000 m., and affords a safe and speedy navigation, particularly at the end of the season, to vessels bound to Ireland, or the western ports of Great Britain, that are too long detained in the Baltic, and that cannot attempt the voyage round by the N. Sea, without danger of shipwreck, or the market being lost from delay.

CANAL, of LANGUEDOC, was begun in 1666, in order to effect an inland communication between the Atlantic and Mediterranean, and finished in 1682. It is carried over 37 aqueducts, and crossed by 8 bridges. From the port of Cette, in the Mediterranean, it crosses the Lake of Thau, and below Thoulouse is conveyed by 3 sluices into the Garonne. The reservoirs of water, collected from the hills for the supply of this navigation, are immense. From one of these, the water is conveyed by three large brass cocks, with mouths as large as a man's body, yet though these remain open for months successively, there is no visible diminution of water in the great reservoir. Between Beziores and Gapestan, is the Mal Pas, where the canal is conveyed for the length of 720 feet, under a mountain cut into a lofty arcade, lined with freestone, except where it is a rock. At Adge there is a curious, round sluice lock, or chamber, with three openings, three different depths of the water or levels meeting here; and the gates are so contrived, that vessels may pass into any one of them by opening the sluice belonging to it. There are 15 locks upon it in the fall towards the ocean, and 45 on the side of the Mediterranean. Regular locks for carrying boats over eminences were first erected in France.

Canalegie, Cornw. S of Padstow.

CANANORE, a large sea-port, on the coast of Malabar, ceded to the English by Tippoo Sultan, in 1792. Lat. 12 0 N lon. 75 14 E.

CANARY ISLANDS, in the Atlantic Ocean, near the continent of Africa, are 7 in number, namely, Grand Canary, the chief, 42 m. long and 27 broad; its capital, Canary, is a well-built town; Palma, Ferro, Gomera, Teneriff, Fuertaventura, and Lancerota; to which may be added several smaller islands, as Gracioza, Roccas, Allegranza, St. Clare, Inferno, and Lobos. They are subject to the Spaniards, and produce wheat, sugar-canes, wine, and excellent fruits, and it is hence that the Canary birds originally came. Lat. from 27 30 to 29 30 N lon. from 12 0 to 17 50 W.

CANCALLE, a bay and sea-port, on the coast of France, 10 m. E of St. Maloes.

CANDAHAR, a kingdom of Asia, between Persia and the river Indus. The dominions of the Sultan of this country extend westward to the neighbourhood of the city of Tershish, including, besides Candahia Proper, Cabul, Ghozii, part of Segestan, and part of Korasan; a tract extending 650 m. in length, its breadth unknown: on the E side of the Indus he possesses the territory of Cashmere, and some small districts above the city of Attock. These countries are all called by the general name of the country of the Abdallis. Its capital is Candahir, a rich trading town, situated on the river Hermend, in the road from Ispahan to Delhi, 145 m. SW of Cabul. Lat. 33 0 N lon. 65 30 E.

CANDEISH, a rich and populous province in Hindoostan, subject to the Poonah Mahrattas. It is bounded on the N by Malwa; on the W by Guzerat; on the E by Berar; and on the S by Dowlatabad.

Canderton, Worcest. near Stresham.

CANDIA, an island in the Mediterranean, formerly Crete, S of the Archipelago, about 150 m. in length, and from 15 to 45 in breadth. It produces corn, wine, oil, wool, silk, and excellent honey, and is chiefly inhabited by Greeks. Mount Ida, in the middle of the island, is a huge, barren, sharp-pointed eminence. Its capital, Candia, though formerly populous, is now in a manner deserted, there being little but rubbish, except at the bezar, or market-place, and the harbour being only fit for boats. It is 500 m. from Constantinople. Lat. 35 10 N lon. 25 28 E.

Candlesby, Linc. NE of Spilsby. Candleshow, Linc. near Candlesby.

CANDY, a kingdom of Ceylon, containing about a quarter of the island. It is mountainous, and abounds with rivulets, which the inhabitants are dexterous in turning to water their land, which is fruitful in rice, pulse, and hemp. The king is absolute, and his subjects are idolatrous. Its capital is of the same name, but is not the residence of the king. Lat. 7 45 N lon. 80 52 E.

CANTON, or QUANG-TCHEOU, a large, populous, and wealthy city of China, seated on one of the finest rivers in the empire. It is the capital of the province of Quantong, and the centre of the European trade in that country. It consists of three towns, divided by high walls. Temples, magnificent palaces, and courts, are numerous. The streets are long and straight, paved with flag stones, and adorned with lofty arches. The houses are remarkably neat, but consist of only one story, and they have no windows to the street. The covered market-places are full of shops. They have manufactures of their own, especially of silk-stuffs. The number of inhabitants is computed at 1,000,000, many of whom reside in barks, which form a kind of floating city; they touch one another, and are so ranged as to form streets. Each bark lodges a family and their grand-children, who have no other dwelling. At break of day, all the people who inhabit them depart to fish, or to cultivate their rice. Lat. 23 8 N lon. 113 E.

Cantrebychan, E of Carmarthen. Cantremeur, N of Carmarthen.

CANTYRE, a peninsula of Argyleshire, 50 m. long from N to S, and from 5 to 8 broad. Across the isthmus which joins it on the N. to the mountainous district of Knapdale, and which is scarcely a mile broad, it has been usual to draw boats and small vessels, in order to avoid the dangerous navigation round the headland, amid shoals and currents. A canal might easily be cut across it. To the S the peninsula terminates in a great promontory, surrounded by a group of dangerous rocks, called the Mull of Cantyre. The soil in general is fertile, particularly in the S parts.

CANVEY ISLAND, in the parish of Laingdon, Essex, 3 m. from Leigh, and 5 m. in length from Hole Haven to Leigh, is often overflowed by the Thames (which is here 2 miles over), except the hilly part, to which the sheep, that are fed here in great numbers, at such times retire.

CARLSCRONA, or CARLSCROON, a town of Blekinge, in S. Gothland, with a harbour, large and commodious, but of difficult entrance, on account of the shoals and rocky sands at its mouth. The town mostly stands upon a small, rocky island, which rises gently in a bay of the Baltic; the suburbs extend over another small rock, and along the mole, close to the bason, where the fleet is moored. The way into the town from the main land is carried over a dyke to an island, and thence along 2 long wooden bridges, joined by a rock. The town is spacious, and contains about 18,000 inhab.; some of the buildings are brick, but generally they are of wood. Here is a dock hollowed out of the solid rock, capable of receiving the largest vessels, and a covered one whose bottom and sides are of hewn granite; rows of granite pillars support the roof, and bear rather the appearance of a colonnade to a temple than a receptacle for ships. In 1680 the town was founded; in 1724 the former dock, and in 1779 the latter was completed. According to the original plan, 3 basons and 30 docks, communicating by sluices, were intended, but a century will probably elapse before they can be completed. CELEBES, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, called also Macassar, S of the Philippines, E of Borneo, and W of the Moluccas. The heat would be insupportable but for the N winds, and the rains which constantly fall five days before and after the full moon, and during two months that the sun is nearly vertical. The fruits are ripe at all times of the year, and in the forests are large herds of deer, wild hogs, and large ferocious monkeys; the most dangerous are the white, especially to women, whom they seize and tear to pieces. The chief enemies of the monkeys are the serpents, which are continually in pursuit of them; the larger swallowing them whole, and the smaller ensnaring them by art, seizing on them, and drinking their blood. No country in the world is furnished with a greater variety of poisons. The Dutch have several forts and settlements here. The natives are Mahometans, of an olive colour, low of stature, but strong and hardy. The NE point of the island is in lat. 1 42 N lon. 122 14 E.

CEYLON, or, in Arabic, SERANDIB, a large and mountainous island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, E of Cape Comorin, on the coast of Coromandel, about 200 m. in length, and 160 in breadth. It produces large quantities of cinnamon, and its pepper is of superior quality. Here is a great variety of wood for all uses; but the most remarkable tree in the island is the tallipot, one of whose leaves will cover 10 men, and protect them from rain. It abounds in corn, rice, elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, deer, hares, dogs, jackalls, monkeys, tigers, and bears. In some places there are mines, whence are got rubies, sapphires, topazes, and other stones of less value. The Dutch were in possession of all the coast of this fertile island, and to the distance of 10 or 12 leagues up the country, but it now belongs to the British. The natives are the Bedas, a hardy race, on the north; and on the south the Cinglasses, a people equally inoffensive, but more superstitious; they implore the interposition of their saints and heroes, and have various idols of monstrous forms. They are divided into tribes like the Hindoos, and their language, which is peculiar to themselves, is said to be copious, smooth, elegant, and polite. Lat. from 6 to upwards of 9 deg. Chepperfield, Herts, near King's Langley. Chepstead, Kent, in Chevening parish.

CHEPSTOW, a populous flourishing town of Monmouths. seated on the Wye, near its confluence with the Severn, 18 m. N of Bristol, and 127 W of London. It is the port for all the towns that stand on the Wye and Lug. Ships of 6 or 700 tons burthen are built here, or come up to the town. Five vessels trade constantly between this port and London, generally going and returning in two months. A market-boat, of 70 tons burthen, goes likewise regularly to Bristol every Thursday, and returns the same day. The merchants import their own wine from Oporto, and flax, deal, pitch, &c. from Norway and Russia. The tide is said to rise higher here than in any other part of Europe, swelling to 50 or 60 feet perpendicular. Market on Sat.

CHER, a depart. of France, bounded on the N by the depart. of the Loiret, and on the S by the depart. of the Allier. It receives its name from the river Cher, which rises in Auvergne (in the depart. of the Creuse), and, passing by Veirson, St. Aignan, Montrichard, &c. falls into the Loire, 5 m. above the mouth of the Indre. Bourges is the chief town.

CHERASCO, a city, capital of a principality of Piedmont, situated at the conflux of the rivers Stura and Tanaro.

CHERBURG, a maritime town, in the depart. of the Channel, 50 m. NW of Caen, containing about 6000 inhab. The harbour will admit vessels of 900 tons at high water, and of 250 at low. Woollen stuffs are manufactured here, and the inhabitants build small vessels. Lat. 49 38 N lon. 1 33 W.

CHERSO, an island, about 150 m. in circumference, with a town of the same name in its centre, in the Adriatic, on the coast of Morlachia, lately subject to the Venetians, but now to the house of Austria. The soil is mountainous, but the air is good; it yields abundance of wood, wine, cattle, oil, and excellent honey. Lat. 45 11 N lon. 14 40 E.

CHERSON, the capital of New Russia, 50 m. NE of Ockzakow, in the government of Ekaterinoslav, lately erected on the banks of the river Dnieper, 10 m. above the mouth of the Ingulec. It was intended by the empress Catharine to be the principal mart for foreign trade in this part of her dominions. It is not yet very large, but the houses are of stone, and neatly executed. It has a dock for the construction of large vessels, from which several have been already launched. The public works are executed, and the plantations formed by criminals, who amount to some hundreds. It is supplied with fuel by reeds only, of which there is an immense forest in the shallows of the Dnieper, near the town. Rails, and even temporary houses, are made of them. They are tall and strong, and afford shelter to various kinds of aquatic birds, some of which are very beautiful. In this city, the humane Howard ended his days; he was to the last engaged in the merciful employment of visiting those who were sick and in prison. Lat. 46 40 N lon. 33 10 E.

Cherston, Devons. near Torbay. Cherton, Wilts, near the Devizes.

CHERTSEY, a town of Surry, in a low situation near the Thames, over which there is a handsome bridge of 7 arches, 7 m. W of Kingston, and 20 W by S of London. It was formerly the residence of some of the Saxon kings, has a trade in malt, which it conveys in barges to London. Market on Wedn.

CHESAPEAK, one of the largest bays in the world. Its entrance is between Cape Charles and Cape Henry, in Virginia, 12 m. wide, and it extends 270 m. to the northward, on both sides of the state of Maryland. It is from 7 to 18 m. broad, and generally 9 fathoms deep, affording a safe and easy navigation, and many commodious harbours. It receives the waters of the rivers Susquehannah, Patomac, Rappahanoc, York, and James.

Chesellburgh, Somers. between Ilchester and Crookhorn. Chesellbury, Wilts, near Uphaven. Cheselton, Dorsets. in the Isle of Portland.

CHESHIRE, a county palatine of England, separated on the N from Lancashire by the river Mersey, but just at the NE point it borders on Yorks.; on the E by Derbys. and part of Staffords.; on the S by Shrops. and a detached part of Flints.; and on the W and SW by Denbighs. and Flints. from which latter it is separated by the river Dee: on the NW it is washed by the Irish sea, that part of it being a peninsula, about 13 m. in length and 6 in breadth, formed by the mouths of the Mersey and the Dee. This county extends 35 m. from N to S, and 42 from E to W. It is divided into 7 hundreds, containing 1 city, 11 market towns, 101 parishes, and 227,031 inhab. The air is temperate and very healthy. The soil is rich in pasture and corn land. Immense quantities of cheese are made in this county; but a considerable quantity of what goes by the name of Cheshire cheese is made in Shropshire, Staffordshire, and Lancashire. London alone is said to consume 14,000 tons of it; vast quantities are also sent to foreign parts, to Ireland, Scotland, and different parts of England. The manufactures are extensive, and it is noted for its salt springs. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Dee, Weaver, and Dane; and here are several small lakes.

Cheshunt, with its Park and Wash, Herts, near Hoddesdon. Here Richard Cromwell, the protector, under the assumed name of Clark, spent many years of a venerable old age in obscurity and peace, much to be preferred, no doubt, to all the splendid infelicities of guilty ambition. He first resided here in 1680, in a house near the church, and died in 1712, in his 86th year. He enjoyed a good state of health to the last; and was so hale and healthy, that, at fourscore he would gallop his horse for many miles together.

Cheselborn, Dorsets. near Middleton.

Chesington, Surry, between Esher and Ewel.

Chesil Bank, Dorsets. is composed of gravel and pebbles thrown up in the sea, 9 m. in length; between it and the shore there is a narrow sea, and it connects Portland with the main land. Chestal, Staff. in Longton parish.

CHESTER, the capital of Cheshire, is a large, ancient, and populous city, 182 m. NW of London, containing 9 well-built churches, besides the cathedral, called St. Werburgh's, which looks as antique as the castle, and has 3296 houses, and 16,140 inhab. They were both built by Hugh Lupus, nephew to William the Conqueror. It is seated on the Dee, over which there is a noble bridge (having a gate at each end) of 12 arches, by which vessels come from the sea to the quay: and by a canal it has communication with most of the new inland navigations. Its 3 annual fairs, on Feb. 24, July 5, and Oct. 10, each lasting a week, are the most noted in England, especially for Irish linens. The main streets have a peculiarity of construction; they are hollowed out in the rock to a considerable depth, and the houses have, elevated in front, a sort of covered portico, which are called rows, and afford a sheltered way for foot passengers. The city has 4 gates and 3 posterns, and is 2 m. in compass. It consists chiefly of 4 large streets, which are pretty even and spacious, and as they cross one another in straight lines, meeting in the centre, they make an exact cross, with the town-house and exchange, a neat structure, in the middle. In the castle, where the earls of Chester formerly held their parliaments, is a stately hall, somewhat like that at Westminster, where the palatine courts and assizes are held. Chester has a manufactory of gloves and tobacco-pipes, and a considerable traffic of shop goods into N. Wales. Markets on Wedn. and Sat.

CHESTER, a county of S. Carolina; a town of New Hampshire; a town and county of Pennsylvania, with a fine harbour on the Delaware, 12 m. SW of Philadelphia; two towns of New York; a town of Acadia, in Nova Scotia, 22 m. WSW of Halifax; a town and river of Maryland; and a town of Virginia.

CHILI, a large country of S. America, bounded on the W by the South Pacific Ocean; on the N by Peru; on the E by immense deserts, which divide it from Paraguay and other parts of S. America; and on the S by Patagonia. It is upwards of 800 m. in length, but its breadth is uncertain. The Spanish colonies are thinly dispersed along the borders of the S. Sea, on a narrow tract extending from 30 to 50 m. in breadth. A profusion of natural productions is seen throughout this country, wherever attempts have been made to cultivate it. The wine made here is palatable and of a good body; and brandy is distilled from it. The northern parts produce olives. The useful animals introduced here from Europe have multiplied surprisingly. Mines of gold and copper are numerous. It is claimed by the Spaniards, but the greater part of it is possessed by the still unconquered and independent natives.

CHILKA, a lake of Hindoostan, on the sea-coast of the province of Cattack, in the country of Orissa, and on the NW side of the Bay of Bengal. It communicates with the sea by a narrow but deep opening, and is shallow within. CHINA, an extensive empire of Asia, bounded on the W by mountains and deserts, which divide it from part of Tartary, Thibet, and the kingdom of Ava; on the N by E. Tartary, from which it is separated by a wall above 2000 m. in length, on which there are about 45,000 towers; on the E by the Yellow Sea and the Chinese Ocean: and on the S by the same ocean, Tonquin, Laos, Pegu, and Ava. It lies between 20 and 41 deg. N lat. and between 96 and 125 deg. E lon. As this extensive country lies under a variety of climates, its air is very different. In the S they are exposed to tropical heats and periodical rains, while the rivers in the N are generally frozen up for some months during the winter. It is chiefly a flat open country, but there are some mountains, which are generally well cultivated and covered with trees, and there are mines of iron, tin, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver. There is abundance of corn, and pulse of all sorts, especially rice; and here are several trees, fruits, and animals, and a great number of simples, peculiar to the country, particularly a plant, called ginseng, a tree that produces peas, differing little from those of Europe; another, bearing a kind of gum, which makes excellent varnish; a third, bearing white berries, of the size of a hazel nut, whose pulp is tallow, of which candles are made; and a fourth, called the white wax-tree, producing that article superior to the common bees-wax. The bamboo cane grows to the height of an ordinary tree; and though it is hollow within, the wood is hard, and proper for many uses, such as pipes to convey water, boxes, baskets, and the making of paper, after it is reduced into a sort of paste. China is the only country which produces the tea-plant, and supplies other nations with that article when prepared. There is scarcely a village of China, especially in the S, but what enjoys the benefit of some navigable river, lake, canal, or arm of the sea; and wherever there is a town on shore, there is another of boats upon the water, and many families are born, live, and die there; hogs, poultry, dogs, and other domestic animals, being kept on board the same as on shore. Besides these vessels, there is a prodigious number of floats of timber perpetually passing up and down the rivers and canals, which carry vast numbers of people on them; and the proprietors build little huts upon them, where they live till they have disposed of their timber. There is no part of the world where the inhabitants observe the forms of politeness so much as in China; they are perpetually interchanging civilities and salutations: the children shew the greatest respect for their parents, and these shew a great veneration for their ancestors. They are, however, very deceitful and treacherous. The complexion of the Chinese is rather tawny; those are thought to be the most handsome who are the most corpulent. The women are modest, and remarkable for their little feet. Polygamy, and various forms of idolatry, deform this improved country; here are followers of the Lamas blended with the disciples of Confucius. The articles exported from China are tea, China-ware, lackered ware, paper, and the water-colour, known by the name of Indian ink, raw silk, cotton, manufactured silks, gold and silver stuffs.

Here the younger Pliny was born, who, in his letters, speaks with rapture of the deligluful scenery in the environs of his native town. His statue is placed in a niche on the outside of one of the churches, with a Latin inscription, bearing the date of 1499. The inhabitants have established several manufactories of cotton and silk, and trade with the Grisons.

COMORA ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the Indian Ocean, lying opposite to the coast of Zanguebar, in Africa, N of the Channel of Mosambique, and NW of Madagascar. They are four in number, Johanna or Anjoan, Mayotta, Mohilla, and Comora or Anjazija. Comora, which gives name to the rest, is about 6 leagues long and 3 wide. The mountains are lofty, and richly clothed with wood, chiefly fruit trees; fine streams are numerous, and the grass and trees are green throughout the year. They produce rice, peas, yams, purslain, cocoanuts, plantains, oranges, lemons, citrons, limes, pine-apples, cucumbers, tamarinds, sugar-canes, and honey. Their animals are buffaloes, goats, tortoises, cameleons, large bats, hens, and a great variety of birds unknown in Europe. Though Johanna is not the largest island, the Arabs, who have settled here, exact tribute from all the others. They are about 3000 in number, profess the Mahometan religion, and are settled on the sea-coast. The original natives, in number about 7000, occupy the hills, and are frequently at war with them, as are also the natives of the other islands. In the interior part of the island is a lake accounted sacred by the natives; on this there is a number of ducks, which they hold in veneratton. Being averse to conduct strangers there, they stipulate that all guns shall be left at a place 5 m. from the lake. The birds being thus kept in safety, become perfectly tame, and fearlessly approach those who go to see them. The E. India ships often touch here for refreshments. The people on the coast speak English intelligibly. They preserve the language and manners of Arabia, and are not of so dark a complexion as the original natives. The Comora Islands lie between 11 and 13 deg. S lat. and between 44 and 47 E lon.

CONGO, or LOWER GUINEA, a large tract of country, on the W coast of Africa, extending from the equinoctial to 17 deg. S lat. and containing the countries of Loango, Congo Proper, Angola, and Benguela. It is bounded on the W by the Atlantic, on the N by Benin and Makoko, on the E by Makoko and the interior of Africa, and on the S by Mataman and unknown lands. Their seasons are the reverse of ours: during our summer they have rain almost every day, and this is called the winter season; but, during their summer, the weather is constantly serene. In the deserts within land there are elephants, tigers, leopards, monkeys, serpents of a monstrous length, rattlesnakes, vipers, dangerous white ants, or pismires, scorpions, and other venomous insects, both flying and reptile; and, in the river Zaire, crocodiles and river horses. Near the coast the soil is fertile, producing various kinds of fruits, besides palm trees, from which they get wine and oil. Many of the inhabitants worship the sun, moon, and stars, and different kinds of animals; others have embraced the religious profession of the Portuguese. They are skilful in weaving cotton cloth, and carry on the traffic in slaves, as well as in ivory, cassia, fruits, and other produce of the country. Congo is divided into several provinces. The principal rivers are the Zaire, the Dando, the Coanza, the Vambra, and the Barbela.

CONGO PROPER, is about 150 m. in length along the coast, and 372 in breadth, included between Loango and Angola. Honey and wax are found here in prodigious plenty. The principal town is St. Salvador.

CONNAUGHT, the most westerly province in Ireland, containing the counties of Leitrim, Sligo, Mayo, Roscommon, and Galway. It is bounded on the W and NW by the ocean, on the N by Ulster, and on the E and S by Leinster and Munster. It contains 296 parishes, and 95,821 houses, and is 180 m. in length, and 84 in breadth. It has no considerable rivers, besides the Shannon; but has several convenient bays and creeks. It is fertile in many places, but thinly inhabited; but, by the introduction of the linen manufacture, the numbers of the population is increasing.

CONNECTICUT, one of the five states of New England. It is 73 m. long, and about 44 broad, and is bounded on the W by New York, on the N by Massachusets, on the E by Rhode Island, and on the S and SE by the Sound, which divides it from Long Island. Its counties are Hartford, New Haven, New London, Fairfield, Windham, Litchfield, Middlesex, and Tolland; and contains 261,942 inhab. Though subject to the extremes of heat and cold, and to frequent and sudden changes of weather, the country is healthful, and the most populous, in proportion to its extent, of any of the United States: in 1790, the number of the inhabitants was 237,946, of which 2764 were slaves. It resembles a well-cultivated garden, producing, with moderate labour, the necessaries and conveniences of life in abundance. The inhabitants are of the religious denomination of Independents. Its principal rivers are the Connecticut, the Housatonik, and the Thames. The river Connecticut rises in the N part of New Hampshire, separating that state from Vermont, enters Massachusets at Northfield, crosses that state, enters Connecticut about 7 m. N of Hartford, and after dividing the latter state nearly in the centre, runs into the sea at the NE end of Long Island Sound. Between Walpole on the E, and Westminster on the W side of the river, are the great falls, over which a bridge, 160 feet in length, was built in 1784, the first ever erected over this noble river, which is navigable above 40 m. for large vessels, and much farther for small ones.

CONSTANCE, the name of two lakes that separate Swisserland from Germany. The Upper Lake, or the Boden See, is 15 leagues long and 6 broad. Through this lake the Rhine flows, and then enters the Lower Lake, or Zeller Zee, which is 16 m. long, and 10 in its greatest breadth.

CONSTANCE, a city of Suabia, pleasantly seated on the Rhine, between two lakes of the same name, 35 m. NE of Zurich. It has magnificent public buildings, and once flourished in commerce, but is now much reduced: a dead stillness prevails throughout the town, grass grows in the principal streets, and the inhab. scarcely amount to 3000.

CONSTANTINA, a town of Andalusia.

CONSTANTINA, or COSTHINA, anciently CIRTA, a city, capital of a district of Algiers, situated on the river Ramnel. It was formerly one of the strongest towns of Numidia: abundance of ruins give evidence of its ancient grandeur. Lat. 36 50 N lon. 6 15 E.

Constantine, Cornw. 3 m. from Helston.

CONSTANTINOPLE, the ancient BYZANTIUM, one of the largest and most celebrated cities of Europe, standing at the SE extremity of Romania, and capital of the Ottoman Empire, 112 m. ESE of Adrianople, 670 SE of Vienna, and 1250 from Paris and Madrid. It is pleasantly seated between the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora, on a neck of land separated from Natolia by a strait a mile in breadth. The grand signior's palace, called the Seraglio, is on the sea-side, surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and is 7 m. in circumference, including the gardens. It contains, besides the public offices and the apartments of the sultan and the women, 162 odas, or apartments, for the Janizaries. Fronting the great gate of the seraglio, is the celebrated royal mosque of St. Sophia, built for a Christian church by the emperor Justinian, to which the grand signior goes in person every Friday. In the castle of the seven towers, to which an eighth has been added, situated near the Sea of Marmora, state prisoners are confined. The bazar, or markets, are square buildings, covered with domes, and supported by arcades. The number of houses in Constantinople must be prodigious, since 30,000 of them have been destroyed by fire in a day, without greatly changing the aspect of the city. The houses in general are crowded with inhabitants, yet they have a mean appearance on the outsides, where there are few or no windows, and the streets are narrow: even the palaces of the grandees having nothing remarkable on their outside, but within they are decorated with splendid and costly ornaments. Here are reckoned 3770 streets and lanes, which are never clean; and the inhabitants are visited by the plague almost every year. The inhabitants have been estimated at 800,000, of which about half are Turks, two-thirds of the other half Greeks, Armenians, and Franks, and the rest Jews. The great square, near the mosque of the sultan Bajazet, is the place for public diversions, where the jugglers and mountebanks display their tricks. The street called Adrianople is the longest and broadest in the city. The circumference of the city is by some said to be 15 m. and by Tournefort 23 m.; to which, if we add the suburbs, it may be 34 m. in compass. The suburb, called Pera, is delightfully situated, and is the place where the ambassadors of England, France, Holland, and Venice reside. Constantinople is built in form of a triangle, and as the ground rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea, in which the palaces, mosques, baguios, and caravanseras, rising above the other houses, have a grand effect. The harbour is spacious and convenient. Lat. 41 N lon. 28 59 E.

CONSTANTINOPLE, THE STRAIT OF, anciently THE THRACIAN BOSPHORUS, forms the communication between the Euxine or Black Sea, and the Propontis or Sea of Marmora. It is the boundary between Europe and Asia in this part, and is 20 m. long, and, where narrowest, a mile and a quarter broad. The adjacent country is remarkably beautiful. On one side of the strait is situated Constantinople, and on the other Scutari, which is considered as a suburb to the city.

CORK, a county of Munster, in Ireland, 84 m. in length and 60 in breadth, being the largest in the kingdom. It is bounded on the W and SW by Kerry and the sea; on the N by Limerick; on the E by Waterford and a part of Tipperary; and on the S by the ocean. It contains 269 parishes, 76,739 houses, and about 416,000 inhab. It abounds with excellent harbours, and has many fine rivers, as the Blackwater, Lee, Banon, Ilen, &c. The soil varies; in many parts it is fertile, and the agriculture of late years has been considerably improved.

CORK, city of, the capital of the county, and the second in Ireland for extent, trade, and population, containing about 8600 houses, and near 100,000 inhab. It is a well-built place, and has improved surprisingly of late years, several broad streets having been lately added, by filling up the canals that ran through them. It is seated on the river Lee, by which it is nearly surrounded, and by means of the different channels vessels come up into the different parts of the town. Its principal export is salt provisions. During the slaughtering season, which holds from August to the latter end of January, they kill and cure about 100,000 head of black cattle. Their other exports consist of pork, tallow, hides raw and tanned, butter, candles, calves, lambs, and rabbits' skins, wool, linen and woollen yarn, and worsted and linen cloth. The country adjacent to Cork, is hilly and beautiful, affording extensive and diversified prospects. It is 15 m. from the sea, about 50 nearly S of Limerick, and 124 SW of Dublin. Lat. 51 54 N lon. 8 23 W.

CORK HARBOUR, or the COVE OF CORK, one of the best in the world, is about 7 m. below the town, and so spacious and deep, as to be capable of containing the largest vessels, and the most extensive fleets. The entrance is easy, and it is secure from currents and storms. One side of Cork Harbour is formed by Great Island, which is 4 m. long and 2 broad, and very fertile.

CORNWALL, a county of England, which forms the SW extremity of Great Britain. It is bounded on the E by Devons. its other parts are washed by the sea. Its length from E to W is 74 m., its breadth next to Devons. is about 46, but it soon contracts, and is gradually narrowed into isthmuses: on the SW it terminates in two promontories, the Lizard Point, and the Land's End. It contains 9 hundreds, and 161 parishes, between 1200 and 1300 villages, 27 market-towns and 216,667 inhab. From its vicinity to the sea, it is exposed to frequent storms, but exempted from hard frosts and great heats. There is abundance of rainy and foggy weather; but the inhabitants are seldom troubled with agues or fevers. The spring shews itself in the buds and blossoms sooner than in the other parts of England; but the harvest is later, and the fruits have less flavour than in the midland counties. Here are some uncommon plants, and plenty of sea-herbs, as camphire, eringo, ros solis, &c. It is well situated for the herring and pilchard fisheries, and the inhabitants fully avail themselves of their local advantages. It derives, however, its chief importance from its minerals; these consist of tin and copper. The copper-mines are numerous and rich in ore; small quantities of gold and silver have sometimes been found; but its tin mines are its greatest source of wealth; for these it has been long famous, and its coasts have been visited by the Phœnicians and Greeks in very remote antiquity; they were known several centuries before the Christian æra, and have been worked continually ever since. With the metalline ores are found large quantities of mundic and arsenic; many sorts of stones are also found here, particularly moorstone, which is used both in buildings and for millstones, and which, when polished, appears splendid and beautiful: and in the cavernous parts of rocks are found transparent crystals, called Cornish diamonds, which are very brilliant when well polished. The number of men, women, and children employed in raising the tin ore, washing, stamping, and carrying, is stated by some to amount to 16,000. The principal rivers are the Tamar, Camel, and Fale. As this country was one of the places to which the ancient Britons retreated, the Gaelic or Celtic language was long retained here, and has become extinct but very lately.

The streets are narrow and badly paved, and the buildings mostly ancient. St. Michael's church is a fine building, and the steeple the most beautiful structure in Europe. St. Mary's Hall is a venerable pile, ornamented with a number of ancient paintings, exemplifying the legend of Peeping Tom and Lady Godwin. It has communication, by canals, with Oxford, Lichfield, many other inland navigations, and with the Thames. The story of Leofric, earl of Mercia, and lord of this place, heavily taxing the citizens, and only remitting them at the entreaty of Godina, his wife, on condition of her riding naked through the city, which he thought she would never submit to; but which, it is said, she performed, with her long hair so disposed as almost wholly to cover her body, is commemorated till this day, by the figure of a man peeping down into the street from one of the houses. On that extraordinary occasion all the doors and windows were shut, and Camden says, that nobody looked after her. The tradition, however, is, that one would needs be peeping, and that he was thereupon struck blind. The inhabitants celebrate this event by the exhibition of a mock procession annually, by the corporation and different trading companies, to escort a valiant fair one, who rides in a close flesh-coloured dress, for a premium. Market on Frid. Fairs on May 2, Friday in Trinity Week, and November 1. Trinity fair lasts 8 days, and is called the Show Fair.

CROMARTY, a tolerably fertile, and, of late years, well-cultivated shire of Scotland, comprehending part of a peninsula, on the south coast of the Frith, to which it gives name. On the S and W it is bounded by Ross-sh.; and on the E by the Frith of Murray. It is 12 m. long from E to W, and about 3 m. in its greatest breadth. Its capital, CROMARTY, has a manufacture of hempen cloth, which employs about 200 persons, and a considerable coasting trade in corn, thread, yarn, fish, and skins. It is situated at or near the entrance of the Frith of Cromarty, the most safe, extensive, and commodious bay, or harbour, of Scotland, and one of the finest in Europe, or the world. This truly excellent, but much neglected harbour, the Portus Salutis of the Romans, is about 22 m. in length, and, in some parts, 4 in breadth: the entrance is narrow and bold, being formed by two huge, lofty rocks, which project into the sea till they approach within a mile of each other, and therefore, defend this fine bay completely from winds and storms. These rocky promontories, or islands, thus approaching each other, and having also a similar appearance, are called by the natives, The Sooters of Cromarty, which, in the Scottish language, means wooers, or lovers. Such, in fact, is the vast extent of sea-room in this bay, and such its length, depth, and breadth, that almost the whole British navy might ride with safety within it; and the state of the shore, or anchorage ground, on both sides, for several miles up, is so favourable and smooth, that were a vessel driven from her cables and cast ashore, there would be little or no damage incurred. In violent easterly winds, when no vessel can venture to look into any port of the E. coast of Scotland, from the Frith of Forth northwards, all vessels, thus situated, flock into this bay. It will appear of still greater importance, when it is known, that from Wick, in Caithness, to this frith, a distance of 60 miles, the shore is bold, rocky, and utterly inaccessible to sea-vessels of any size, the waters of Dornoch excepted; which, however, are of no great utility to navigation, by reason of shallows and quicksands.

CUBA, or ALCUBA, a town in Alentejo.

CUBA, a West-India island, near the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, about 700 m. in length and 70 in its mean breadth, subject to the Spaniards. Round the coast are many convenient harbours; and several sorts of mines among the mountains. Here are large forests abounding with game, and extensive pastures, which feed large flocks and herds of horned cattle, sheep, and hogs, originally brought from Europe, and which now run wild. The hills run through the island from E to W, and from these fall many rivulets, which run to the N and S. The land is generally level near the coast. The produce is that of sugar-canes, ginger, long pepper, cassia, wild cinnamon, excellent tobacco, called by the Spaniards cigarros, aloes, mastic, cassia fistula, manioc, maize, cocoa, and some coffee. Here are cedar trees so large, that canoes made of them will hold 50 men; also oaks, firs, palms, cotton-trees, ebony, and mahogany. Havannah is the capital, where the galleons rendezvous that return annually to Spain.

CUMBERLAND, a maritime county of England, bounded on the W by the Irish Sea and Solway Frith; on the N by Scotland; on the E by Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland; and on the SW and S by the sea and Lancashire. It is 70 m. in length from SW to NE, and its greatest breadth from E to W is about 45 m. It contains 1 city, 15 market towns, 80 parishes, and 133,744 inhab. The air is cool; the mountains are large and lofty, feeding numerous flocks of sheep; and the valleys and plains are well cultivated. From the coal-pits on the coast, Ireland is principally supplied with fuel; this trade constantly requiring a great number of ships and mariners. The property here, both in lands and shipping, is more equally divided than in most other countries. Besides the coal-mines, there are others of lead, copper, blue slates for covering the roofs of houses, lapis calaminaris, and of black lead, a mineral almost peculiar to this county, and produced here in quantities sufficient to supply all Europe. This county, and the adjoining one of Westmorland, are celebrated for their lakes, and the beautiful romantic scenery, which their banks and the adjacent country exhibit. They have often afforded subjects for the pen and pencil, and a visit to the lakes has of late become a fashionable tour. See BORRODALE, BUTTERMERE, &c.

CYPRUS, an island in the Mediterranean, between the coast of Syria and that of Carmania, subject to the Turks. The soil is fertile, but subject to long droughts, and there are numerous springs, but no rivers. The Cypriots are, in general, tall and well made; many of them live to a very advanced age: their women have fine eyes, but, in other respects, are far from being beautiful; they do not, however, degenerate from their ancestors, as votaries of that goddess whose favourite habitation this isle was supposed to be. It abounds with game, and great numbers of ortolans, boiled and pickled in vinegar, are annually exported. The chief produce is cotton, silk, and wines: the annual amount of the former is from 3 to 5000 bales; that of the silk is about 25,000; and the wines amount to near 40,000 gallons. The other exports are wool, nutmegs, turpentine, madder, kermes, opium, colequintida, salt, umber, green earth, and a small quantity of cochineal. Nicosia is the metropolis of the island.

DAMASCUS, now called SHAM, a very ancient city of Syria, and the capital of a pachalic, is built in the form of an oblong square. Streams of clear water run across the plain of Damascus, which fertilize the gardens, supply the public fountains, and run into every house. The caravanseras have long galleries, supported by marble pillars, surrounding a large court. The private houses, which are built of wood, have their fronts inwards, inclosing a court, and presenting a dead wall to the streets, although often richly adorned within. The castle is like a little town, having its own streets and houses. The mosques are superb and numerous. The straight street, which runs across the city and suburbs, in a direct line, has shops on each side, where all sorts of merchandise are sold. The gardens and orchards extend several miles round, and are embellished with summer-houses, turrets, fountains, cascades, and streams of water. A manufactory of cutlery is carried on here. Damascus stands on the river Barida, in a very fertile plain, extolled by the Arabs, who speak of it with enthusiasm, as the best watered, and the most delicious of all Syria, and contains about 80,000 inhab. of whom 15,000 are Christians. It is 112 m. NNE of Jerusalem. Lat. 33 45 N lon. 37 0 E.

It is reckoned to contain 200,000 inhab. though there died of the plague, in 1709, above 30,000. It is now subject to the king of Prussia, having been annexed to his dominions in 1793. Lat. 54 22 N lon. 18 38 E.

DANUBE, towards the mouth called ISTER by the ancients, a river of Europe, rising in, and running through, the circle of Suabia, passing by Ulm, then through Bavaria and Austria, passing by Ratisbon, Passau, and Vienna: it then enters Hungary, passing on to Presburg, Buda, and Belgrade, after which it divides Bulgaria from Morlachia and Moldavia, falling into the Black Sea, by several channels, in the province of Bessarabia. It begins to be navigable for boats at Ulm; receives several large rivers as it passes along; is so deep between Buda and Belgrade, that the Turks and their enemies have had men of war on it; yet there are cataracts on it, both above and below Buda, which prevents its being navigable either way in that part.

Danynn, in Roscommon, Connaught.

DARABGERD, a town of Farsistan, Persia, with a considerable manufacture of glass. Near it is found salt of various colours, red, white, black, and green. It is 116 m. ESE of Schiras.

DARAH, or DRAS, a country of Africa, bounded on the E and S by Zahara, on the W by Suz, and on the N by Morocco, Gerula, and Tafilet. It takes its name from the river Darah, which passes through it, rising in the Greater Atlas, and running into the Atlantic near Cape Non.

Dargle, a romantic vale, or glen, in the county of Wicklow, about 10 m. from Dublin. The lofty mountains on each side are clothed with trees down to the edge of the river, which noisily rumbles from rock to rock in the bottom, forming many cascades; and the views from the eminences are grand and beautiful.

DARIEN, an isthmus, or narrow country which joins N. and S. America, having the Atlantic on the NE, and the Pacific on the SW. It extends about 360 m. in length, and from 48 to 135 in breadth. It is generally considered as a province of Terra Firma, though it seems to be a part of N. America, and is of great importance to the Spaniards, as the wealth of Peru is brought annually to Panama and Porto Bello, and thence exported to Europe. Here are many high mountains, and the low grounds are frequently overflowed with the heavy rains. The natives build their houses with hurdles, plaistered over with earth, and have plantations along the banks of the rivers. The girls pick and spin cotton, and the women weave it; and the men fabricate very neat baskets with canes, reeds, or palmetto leaves, dyed of several colours. Polygamy is allowed among them.

DARIEN, a large river of the province of Darien, which empties itself into the Gulf of Darien, in the Spanish Main, in lat. 8 40 N.

DARIEN, a town of Georgia, in N. America.

Darien's Bridge, in Cavan, Ulster.

DARKING, a town of Surry, noted for corn and fowls. The custom of borough English prevails in this manor. It is seated in a healthy air, on a soft, sandy rock, near the river Mole, 23 m. SW of London. Market on Sat.; and a large fair on May 23, for lambs.

Darlaston, Shrops. near Prees. Darlaston, Staffords. near Walsall, contains 916 houses, and 4881 inhab. It communicates with all the late inland navigations. DEAD SEA, or LAKE ASPHALTITES, in Palestine, abounding in bitumen; it contains no verdure on its banks, nor fish in its waters. The cause which deprives it of vegetable and animal life, is the extreme saltness of the water, which is infinitely stronger than that of the sea. It is not true, however, that its exhalations destroy birds flying over it, as it is very common to see swallows skimming along its surface. Fragments of sulphur and bitumen, and mines of fossil salt, are found in the mountains, which extend along the shore. The Jordan runs into it, without any visible discharge for its waters.

DEAL, a sea-port in Kent, 6 m. S by E of Sandwich, and 72 E by S of London. Here are about 1000 houses, and 5500 inhab. who are chiefly supported by the resort of mariners here from the Downs. It has a church and chapel of ease. Market on Tues. and Wedn.

DELHI, a province of Hindoostan, bounded on the W by Moultan; on the NW by Lahore; on the E by the countries of Thibet and Oude; and on the S by Agra and Agimere. The natural fertility of the soil of this province, and the mildness of its climate, are such, as to favour the most numerous population; yet, having been the seat of continual wars for more than 70 years past, it is almost depopulated; the lands lie waste, and the inhabitants provide only the bare means of subsistence, lest they should attract the notice of those whose trade is pillage. It is about 165 m. in length, and 140 in breadth.

DELHI, the capital of the province of Delhi, was once a large, rich, and populous city, and the capital of the Mogul empire. But, in 1739, when Nadir Shah, or Kouli Khan, invaded Hindoostan, he entered Delhi, and dreadful were the massacres and calamities that followed: 200,000 of the inhab. perished by the sword; and plunder, to the amount of 60,000,000*l.* sterling was collected and carried away. They endured similar disasters on the subsequent invasions of Abdalla, king of Candahar; so that, since the decline and downfall of the Mogul empire, the population is extremely low. The late residence of the Mogul is a magnificent palace, built of red stone, about 1000 ells in length, and 602 in breadth, and which cost 10,500,000 rupees. Lat. 28 37 N lon. 77 40 E.

DENMARK, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the W by the Ocean, on the N and E by the Baltic Sea, and on the S by Germany and the Baltic. The country is generally flat, and the air is rendered foggy by the seas and lakes; but, the weather being changeable, it is purified by frequent breezes. Denmark, properly so called, consists of Jutland and the islands of Zealand and Funen, with the little isles about them; but the king of Denmark's dominions contain the kingdom of Norway, and the duchies of Holstein, Oldenburg, and Delmenhorst, in Germany, besides Iceland, and the other Danish settlements abroad. The revenues are computed at 1,400,000*l.* a year, which arise from the crown lands and duties, and the tolls paid by vessels passing between the Baltic and German Ocean. There is no large river in Denmark, but numerous lakes and channels of the sea, by which it is intersected. In the summer the heat is great, and the days are long; but the winter continues 7 or 8 months. The commodities are corn, pulse, horses, and large beeves, together with the produce of their manufactures. The exports exceed the imports to the amount of 55,000 crowns a year. Copenhagen is the capital.

DERBY, the county town of Derbyshire, is large and well-built, with a spacious market-place and handsome town-house, seated on the river Derwent, which is navigable to the Trent, 36 m. N of Coventry, and 120 NW by N of London. In 1734, a machine was erected here by sir Thomas Lombe, for the manufacturing of silk, the model of which he brought from Italy. It was the first of its kind erected in England; and its operations are to wind, double, and twist the silk, so as to render it fit for weaving. Here are also manufactories of silk, cotton, and worsted stockings, and of elegant porcelain, which last is in high estimation. Derbyshire and foreign marbles are wrought here in vases, urns, columns, and other ornamental articles, and the lapidary and jewellery branches are executed with great neatness. The malting business, and a pottery of queen's earthenware, are also carried on here. In 1745 the Pretender's army entered this town. The number of inhabitants in its five parishes is 11,000. Markets on Wedn. and Frid.

DERBYSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W and NW by Chesh. and Staffords.; on the N by Yorks.; on the E by Nottinghams.; and on the S and SE by Leicesters. and a point of Warwicks. It is divided into 6 hundreds, in which are 13 market-towns, 106 parishes, and 185,487 inhab. The N and W parts are mountainous and stony, and subject to frequent rains, and the air is sharp and cold. The S and E parts are fertile, producing most kinds of grain, particularly barley. The bleak mountains in the Peak abound in the best lead, with marble, alabaster, millstones, iron, coal, and a coarse sort of crystal, and the intermediate valleys are fruitful in grass. The principal rivers are the Derwent, Dove, Erwash, and Trent.

DOMINGO, or HISPANIOLA, the richest of the Caribbee Islands in the W. Indies. It is 350 m. in length, and 110 in breadth: and the climate, though hot, is healthy, except to new comers. The country is uncommonly fruitful, and beautifully diversified with hills and valleys, woods and rivers; it is also well stocked with fruit trees, and produces coffee, sugar, indigo, tobacco, salt, cotton, ginger, gums, wax, honey, and drugs. Its coasts and rivers are well supplied with fish and turtles; and the animals brought here from Europe have multiplied prodigiously, supplying provisions, hides, and tallow. There are also mines of gold, talc, and crystal. The Spaniards have held the eastern part of this island, including about two thirds of the cultivable soil, upwards of three centuries; yet, from the indolence of the people, they had only 14,000 blacks, or mulattoes, of which 7 or 8000 are slaves, and no plantation of consequence, the colony even costing their government 250,000 dollars annually, while the exports from the French or western part, prior to the present war, exceeded in value those of all the British Islands in the W. Indies, taken together. In 1788, the population, &c. of the French part of this invaluable island stood thus: 30,826 white inhab. besides troops, 24,848 mulattoes and free negroes, 434,429 slaves, 793 sugar estates, 3150 indigo ditto, 789 cotton plantations, 3117 coffee estates, 54 cocoa ditto, 520 water-mills, 1639 cattle-mills, 46,823 mules, 36,782 horses, 243,682 head of cattle, &c. and all this within the space of 70 years, as it could only be said to be a colony since 1718, when the throne of Spain was secured to the duke of Anjou. It lies between Jamaica and Porto Rico.

DOMINGO, ST. a large city, capital of the late Spanish part of the island of St. Domingo. The streets are spacious, and straight as a line. Ten of these run from N to S, and 10 others from E to W. The greatest part of the houses first built, are of a sort of marble found in the neighbourhood, and in the style of the ancient towns of Spain and Italy. It is seated on a navigable river, and has an excellent port, or harbour, magnificent in every respect, being a real, natural bason, with a great number of careenings for the vessels that can get at them. There is a rock, however, at the entrance, which will only admit vessels drawing 18 or 20 feet water. This rock, it is said, might be easily removed. Lat. 18 20 N lon. 70 10 W.

Dominic, St. Cornw. N of Saltash.

DOMINICA, an English West-India island, about 29 m. in length and 16 in breadth. It yields coffee, indigo, ginger, and other articles of West-Indian produce; but the soil, being thin, is more adapted to the rearing of cotton than sugar. In the woods are innumerable swarms of bees, which produce great quantities of wax and honey, and the island is well supplied with rivulets of water. It is divided into ten parishes. The only towns of note are Charlotte Town or Rosseau, on the SW side of the island, and Portsmouth, at the head of Prince Rupert's Bay. There is no considerable bay or harbour, but the anchorage round the coast is commodious and safe, and ships find shelter under its capes. It lies about half way between Gaudaloupe and Martinico. Lat. 15 32 N lon. 61 23 W.

DRUMLANRIG, a town of Dumfries, seated on the river Nith, 11 m. N of Dumfries, in the district of Nithsdale, remarkable for a wood of oak, 6 m. in length. In the duke of Queensberry's park there yet remains a few of the wild cattle which anciently inhabited the woods of Scotland. They are milk-white, except their noses, ears, and the orbits of their eyes, which are black. Their form is elegant, they have a spirited wildness in their looks, and when they run, instead of going in the clumsy cow-gallop, they bound like deer.

Drumlish, in Longford, Leinster. Drumloch, near Dromore, in Down, Ulster.

Drummond, a river of Ross-shire.

Drummore Church, in Tyrone, Ulster.

Drummote, and Drumod, in Leitrim, Connaught. Drumquin, in Tyrone, Ulster. Drumshanbo, and Drumsna, in Leitrim, Connaught. Drungand Hills; see Cahircanaway.

DRUSES, a people of Syria, on the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus, governed by particular princes called Emirs. They are very friendly to Europeans, worship the images of saints like Roman Catholics, yet observe the fast of Rammedan, and offer their devotions both in Mahometan mosques and Christian churches. Some of them admit circumcision, but others reject it. They are a strong and robust people, of an active, enterprising character, and accustomed, from their infancy, to fatigues and hardships. Their language is pure Arabic.

Drustwyn, Carmarthens. Druxton, Heref. between Morehampton and Aconbury.

DUBLIN, the capital of Ireland, in the county of the same name, is a large, handsome, and populous city, seated on the river Liffey, containing 200,000 inhab. The appearance of this metropolis, the Bay of Dublin, and the surrounding country, on approaching them from the sea, is grand and beautiful; after passing the Isle of Lambay, and then that of Ireland's Eye, which is small, being a lofty and grotesque-looking rock, and the craggy mountain of Howth, in coming from the north; or, after passing the rocky cliffs of Bray, in approaching them from the south, the extensive Bay of Dublin opens on the view; on the left are seen the hills and mountains of Wicklow; on the right, the gently-rising shores of Clontarf; the city, on a rising ground, at the extremity of the bay, and at several miles distance, with domes and spires, terminates the view. The Cassoon, a beautiful pharos, or light-house, 4 miles from the city, seems, like another Eddystone light-house, to rise out of the sea; from this, however, there is a broad and firm wall, or pier, nearly completed, reaching to Ringsend, to which the city is now nearly extended. On the N side of the wall is the harbour, where vessels lie safe at anchor with an open sea to the N. On the S side of the wall, near the town, are wharfs principally used for bathing; and between these and the opposite shore is an extensive and smooth strand, which is dry at low water; there is a wharf also on the N side of the river, for the purpose of bathing, and elegant baths on both sides of the water. From Ringsend upwards, through the whole city, the river is embanked with quays on both sides; as these are open nearly through their whole extent, they form beautiful walks of very extensive range. The docks laid out on each side of the river are sufficiently capacious to hold several thousands of vessels. The streets of Dublin are pretty regular and well paved, the squares spacious and elegant, and the public buildings are superb. The town is supplied with water by means of pipes. A circular road, about 10 or 12 miles in length, encompasses the city, and the country around it is pleasant. There is not yet in Ireland, as in England, a parochial provision for the poor; but there are, throughout the country, institutions for their relief, supported by voluntary contributions. Of this sort is the House of Industry in Dublin. The trade of Dublin is extensive, and since the emancipation of the country from the dominion of Great Britain, it has increased surprisingly, and is still improving; but the bar at the entrance of the harbour renders the approach of large vessels difficult and dangerous. St. Stephen's Green is a handsome square, nearly 1 m. in circumference. Merion Square commands an extensive view of Dublin Bay. In the Phœnix Park is the salute battery of 22 guns. The Lodge is a new plain building, the summer residence of the lord lieutenant. The greatest improvement to the trade of Dublin is the grand canal and floating dock, forming a water carriage from the Irish Sea into the river Shannon, on the W side of the island, intersecting the whole country. Dublin has a police-guard of 40 horse and 400 foot, well armed. Lat. 53 23 N lon. 6 17 W.

DUBLIN, a county of Ireland, in Leinster, 25 m. in length, and 16 in breadth, bounded on the N by Meath, on the E by the Irish Channel, on the S by Wicklow, and on the W by Meath and Kildare. The soil is rich and fertile in corn and pasture. It contains 107 parishes, 20 of which are in the city of Dublin, 4 market towns, and about 26,000 houses.

DUKE OF YORK'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, WNW of the Isles of Danger, E of New Guinea, and N of the Friendly Isles, was discovered by Commodore Byron, in 1765. It is uninhabited, except by land-crabs and sea-fowl, which last were so unacquainted with man, as not to fear any mischief from him, permitting the seamen to come so near them as to knock them down. Lat. 8.0 S lon. 172 30 W.

DUKE OF YORK'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, between lord Howe's Group, and the SE point of New Ireland, is about 10 m. long, of moderate height, and flat, and so fertile as to represent a perfect garden. The huts of the natives are made of bamboo, with fences before them, within which the ground is well cleared and trodden. In the inclosures, the plantain, banana, yam, sugar-cane, &c. are cultivated: beside these, the island produces beetle-nuts, mangoes, bread-fruit, guavas, and some nutmeg-trees. The animals are dogs, hogs, and poultry. The natives are stout, of a light copper colour, and go without clothes: none are seen with their hair of its natural colour; they dress it with grease and powder. They chew the beetle, and use it with a chenan, and a leaf, as practised in the E. Indies, by which their mouths appear red, and their teeth, in time, become black. The only musical instrument among them is composed of several hollow reeds, of different lengths, fastened together, like the syrinx of the ancients. Their canoes are neatly made, and have an outrigger. Lat. 4 7 S lon. 152 42 E.

Dukepull, Northumb. SW of Hexham. Dukes, Essex, NE of Great Braxted. Dulas, on the NE side of the Isle of Anglesey, on a bay and river of the same name, is much frequented on account of the corn and butter trade. Near it is a red, ochrey earth, fit for painting, and veins of lead ochre, and upon all the coast they make fern ashes. Dulas, the name of several rivers in Wales; two of Carmarthens. one of Brecknocks. one of Radnors. two of Montgomerys. and one of the Isle of Anglesey. Dulas, in the parish of Ewias Lacey, 12 m. from Hereford. Dulas, a small sea-port in Anglesea, Wales, 7 m. from Llangefui.

Dulwich, Surry, in the parish of Camberwell, 5 m. S of London. Here is a college endowed for a master and warden, 4 fellows, 6 poor men, 6 poor women, and 12 poor boys. It was founded by Edward Alleyn, a comedian in Elizabeth's reign, in fulfilment, as it is said, of a vow he had made on receiving a fright in personating one of Shakespeare's devils. This village was formerly noted for its medicinal waters.

DUMBARNY, a parish of Perths.

DUMBARTON, anciently LENNOX, a shire of Scotland, bounded on the W by Argyles. and Loch Long; on the N by Argyles. and Perths.; on the E by Perths. and Stirlings.; and on the S by the shires of Lanerk and Renfrew. Its greatest length is 45 m. its breadth from 6 to 15. The W part of this county abounds with morasses: in other parts it is fertile in corn and pastures; but the principal riches arise from the fisheries in the lochs in and about its coasts. The principal of these is Lochlomond. It contains 24,189 inhab. Its capital, DUMBARTON, is a large, ancient town, situated at the confluence of the rivers Leven and Clyde, 12 m. NW of Glasgow, containing about 2600 inhab. Its principal manufacture is crown and bottle glass, but many of the young women are employed in the neighbouring print fields, on the banks of the Leven. Close to the river is a castle built on a vast rock, formerly deemed impregnable. This town was erected into a royal burgh by king Alexander II. in 1221. About 2000 tons of shipping belong to this place, which has a harbour for large brigs, secure in all weathers.

Durford, Suss. W of Midhurst.

DURHAM, a county palatine of England, bounded on the W by Cumberland and Westmoreland; on the N by Northumberland; on the E by the German Ocean; and on the S by Yorkshire. It is divided into 4 wards, which contain 1 city, 3 market-towns, 113 parishes, and about 179,805 inhab. It is 21 m. in length from E to W, and 32 in breadth from N to S. The bishop is a temporal prince, being earl of Sadberg in this county, and sheriff paramount, as also perpetual justice of peace within his territories. He sits as chief in the courts of judicature, those of assize not excepted; and even when judgment of blood is given. The western side of the county is mountainous, while the eastern and southern are fruitful in corn and pasture, and enjoy a milder air. Here are manufactories of tammies, carpets, sail-cloths, steel, glass, paper, iron-foundries, and immense mines of coal, lead, grindstones, and iron. The principal rivers are the Wear, Tees, Tyne, and Derwent.

DURHAM, the capital of the county of Durham, 14 m. S of Newcastle, and 257 N by W of London, is an ancient city, founded on 7 hills, and surrounded by others more lofty, in a beautiful winding of the river Wear. Here are EDDYSTONE ROCKS, in the English Channel, so called from the great variety of contrary sets of the tide or current which prevail near them. They are situated nearly SSW from the middle of Plymouth Sound, distant from the port about 14 m. and from Ram Head 12 and a half. As they lie nearly in the direction of vessels coasting up and down the Channel, they were very dangerous, and ships were sometimes wrecked on them, before the light-house was established here. They are so exposed to the swells of the ocean, from all the south-western points of the compass, that the heavy seas break on them with inconceivable fury. Sometimes, after a storm, when the sea is to all appearance perfectly smooth, the under current meeting the slope of the rocks, the sea beats upon them in a terrific and magnificent manner, and even rises above the light-house, overtopping it, for the instant, with a canopy of frothy wave. The present light-house is nearly 80 feet high, and has withstood the most violent storms, without sustaining the smallest injury. It was begun by the late Mr. John Smeaton, 1757, and finished 1759, it was destroyed by fire in 1770, and the present building, erected in 1774.

EDINBURGH, a city, the capital of Scotland, situated, in the county to which it gives name, on three hills, 2 m. S of Leith, which is its port, 54 WNW of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and 389 N by W of London. It may properly be divided into the Old and New Towns. The situation of the Old Town is singular and striking: it stands on the middle ridge, or hill, which is narrow and steep, and terminated abruptly on the W by the castle, a very ancient building, accessible only by a draw-bridge, and erected on a lofty precipitous rock; it is defended by strong batteries, and has an arsenal containing 10,000 stand of arms. The High Street, a mile in length, and generally 90 feet broad, extends from the castle to Holyrood House. On each side of this steep hill the houses form narrow lanes, which are called closes, and extend N and S. Many of them are lofty, but so piled, as it were, upon each other, that they are neither commodious nor elegant. The New Town is situated on the N side of the Old, on an elevated plain, from which the ground descends to the S and N with a gentle declivity. It forms an assemblage of uniform streets and squares, including several public buildings, the whole built entirely of stone, with considerable taste and elegance. The buildings on the S side of the Old Town, though inferior to those on the N, are extensive and stately. The erection of a new College on a magnificent plan, was begun in 1789, but never finished for want of sufficient funds. The number of students in the university is estimated at 1000, of whom 400 study medicine. The city is governed by a lord provost, a guild council, and 25 common council. Here are 14 incorporated trades, each having its deacon or warden. The principal public buildings are the Palace of Holyrood House; the Royal Exchange, built in 1753; the Register Office; the Physicians' Hall; Heriot's Hospital, founded in 1628, for the education of 140 poor boys; Watson's Hospital, for the sons of decayed merchants; an Hospital for Orphans; and a Royal Infirmary, incorporated by charter in 1736; the Concert Hall, built after the model of the opera-house at Parma. Edinburgh, with its dependencies, is supposed to contain 100,000 inhabitants, and is supplied with water, conveyed in cast-iron pipes from Commiston, 4 m. to the W. Lat. 55 58 N lon. 3 7 W.

EDINBURGHSHIRE, or MID LOTHIAN, a populous, well-cultivated, fertile, and pleasant shire of Scotland, 27 m. in length, and 16 in breadth, but in some places not above 6. EGYPT, a country of Africa, about 500 m. in length and 160 in breadth, bounded on the S by Nubia, on the W by the Deserts of Barca, Fezzan, &c. on the N by the Mediterranean; and on the E by the Red Sea and the Isthmus of Suez. This country, so famous in history, seems not to have an extent proportionable to the pompous description which the ancients have given of its having contained 20,000 towns or cities, and several millions of inhabitants, and of its ancient kings keeping armies of 300,000 men, and executing those prodigious works, the pyramids, the labyrinth, the immense grottos of Thebais; the obelisks, temples, and pompous palaces; the Lake Mœris, and the vast canals, &c. but when we consider the amazing fertility of the soil, enriched, as it has always been, by the overflowing of the Nile, and its high state of cultivation, these accounts seem more probable. Egypt has been ever noted for its plenty of corn; and when the dearth was in all lands in the days of Jacob, in the land of Egypt there was bread; and all countries sent thither to buy corn. Except in our winter months, the heat is oppressive to all who are not accustomed to it, and they are generally visited by the plague once in about 7 years. The winds are sometimes of such extreme heat and aridity, that their influence proves mortal. During the time they last, the streets are deserted, and the inhabitants are almost blinded by drifts of sand, which are so subtle, that they insinuate themselves into the closets and cabinets

No country in the world is better furnished with corn, rice, flesh, fish, sugar, fruits, and vegetables, than Egypt. It is divided into the Upper, Middle, and Lower, which last comprehends the Delta, which produces oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, in great plenty. The animals found in Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes with the head like a dog's; camels, black cattle, fine horses, and large asses, crocodiles, the hippopotamus or river horse, the cameleon, the ichneumon; ostriches, eagles, hawks, pelicans, water-fowl of various kinds, with the ibis, which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and noxious insects. They have a serpent here, called the cerastes, or horned viper, the bite of which is mortal to those who have not the secret of guarding against it. The practice of charming, alluded to in Psal. lviii. 4. 5; Eccles. x. 11; and Jerem. viii. 7, appears to prevail here till this day; for some of the natives can play with the cerastes, which to them is perfectly harmless; but when applied to a hen, or any other animal, it bites and instantly kills it. Since Egypt has been under the dominion of the Turks, it has been governed by a bashaw, who resides at Cairo. Under him are inferior governors in the several parts of the country. Those in Upper Egypt are generally Arabs, who pay tribute to the Grand Signior, and make presents to the bashaw, governing despotically, and making war with each other: besides these there are shieks, who preside over particular places, and are masters of a few villages. The present population of Egypt is computed at 2,300,000. The inhabitants are composed of four different races of people; the Turks; the Arabs; the Cophts, who are descended from the first Egyptians, which became Christians; and the Mamlouks, who were originally Circassian and Mingrelian slaves, and being the only military force, are the real masters of the country. The governors of the country are Mahometans, but the Cophts, and Greeks, and Latins, are Christians of different sects; and in the great towns there are numbers of Jews. A considerable trade was carried on here in E. India commodities, till the Portuguese found the way to Asia round the Cape of Good Hope. However, the merchants of Europe visit the harbours in the Mediterranean, and import and export several sorts of merchandise; and from other parts the natives get elephants' teeth, gold-dust, musk, civet, ambergris, and coffee. The gold-dust is brought from Negroland to Fez and Morocco, and thence to Cairo in caravans, over immense deserts. The commodities which the merchants purchase here, are coffee, senna, cassia, rhubarb, sal ammoniac, myrrh, saffron, salt-petre, aloes, opium, indigo, sugar, sandalwood, dates, cotton, cloth, &c. The largest of the pyramids takes up ten acres of ground, and is, as well as the others, built upon a rock. The external part is chiefly of large square stones, of unequal sizes, and the height of it about 700 feet: within these, and in their vicinity, are catacombs, wherein are mummies, or embalmed dead bodies, which are three or four thousand years old. The complexion of the Egyptians is tawny, and the farther S the darker, insomuch that those on the confines of Nubia are almost black. They are mostly an indolent people, especially the richer sort, who spend much of the day in drinking coffee, smoking tobacco, and sleeping; and these are said to be ignorant, proud, and ridiculously vain. The principal city is Cairo.

Enbourn, E. and W. Berks, near Newbury, are famous to all ages for the whimsical custom of the manor. On the death of a copyhold tenant, the widow is to enjoy her free bench, in all his copyhold lands, dum sola et casta fuerit; but, if she commit incontinency, she forfeits her widow's estate; yet, after this, if she will come into the next court held for the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, and repeat the following formula, the steward is bound, by the custom, to admit her to her free bench:

'Here I am,
'Riding upon a black ram,
'Like a w——e as I am;
'And for my criticum crancum,
'Have lost my bincum bancum;
'And for my tail's game,
'Have done this worldly shame;
'Wherefore, I pray you, Mr. Steward,
'Let me have my lands again.'

ENGLAND, the southern and most considerable part of the Island of Great-Britain, bounded on the N by Scotland; on the E and NE by the German Ocean; on the S by the English Channel; and on the W by Wales, and the Irish Channel. It lies between 2 deg. E and 6 W lon. and between 49 and 56 N lat. It is of a triangular form. From the Land's End in Cornwall, to Berwick-upon Tweed, it is about 425 m.; from Berwick to the S. Foreland in Kent, its length is about 345 m.; and thence to the Land's End, its greatest breadth is 340. England contains 25 cities, 172 boroughs, 10,000 parishes, and 9,499,400 inhab. being an increase of 1,167,966 within the last 10 years. The country exhibits a variety of prospects, varying from the extensive plain, and gently-rising uplands, with the intervening vales, and gently-flowing rivers, to the lofty mountains, craggy hills, and deep dells. Though in some parts there are large barren moors, and wide uncultivated heaths; on the whole, few countries have a larger proportion of land capable of culture, and there is none where agriculture is better attended to, or, indeed, where it is more necessary for the subsistence of the inhabitants. All the valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, of this country, have been imported at different periods from the continent, and have been kept up and improved by constant attention. Overrun with woods, like the wilds of America, nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, form the only vegetable food which this country formerly afforded. The bear, the wolf, and the wild boar, now totally extirpated, roamed at large in the forests, large herds of stags ranged through the woods, roebucks bounded over the hills, and wild bulls ranged in the marshy pastures. By degrees, the woods were destroyed, in order to make way for cultivation, the marshes were drained, and the wild animals, invaded in their retreats, gradually disappeared, and their places were supplied by the domestic kinds. England now possesses no other wild quadrupeds than some of the smaller kinds, such as the fox, the wild cat, the badger, the martin, and others of the weasel kind; the otter, the hedgehog, the hare and rabbit; the squirrel, dormouse, mole, and several species of the rat and mouse. On the other hand, the various kinds of domestic animals imported from abroad, have been reared to the greatest perfection, and the improvements in the vegetable products of this island have been no less considerable. The rigours of winter, as well as the parching heats of summer, are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent, as the breezes from the sea temper the severities of the opposite seasons; but the changes of weather are generally more frequent and sudden, while few countries are clothed with so beautiful and lasting a verdure. Its situation, however, so far north, is less favourable to the ripening than to the growth of vegetable productions. The harvests, especially in the northern parts, often suffer from the rains, and the fruits fall short of perfect maturity. The richest parts of the land are, in general, the middle and southern: extensive tracts in the northern parts are rather steril, and on the eastern coasts, in many parts, the ground is sandy or marshy. In the north the country is mountainous, and Cornwall and the adjacent counties contain many rough hilly tracts; but, in these parts, a variety of rich and valuable minerals and metals are found. Considered as a corn country, the E coast, from its superior dryness, is favourable to the growth of grain: and the W coast, from the wetness of the climate, is better calculated for pasturage. The most considerable rivers are the Thames, Severn, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Wear, Mersey, Dee, Avon, Eden, Derwent, &c. The lakes are chiefly in the NW counties: and those of Westmoreland and Cumberland, in particular, exhibit varieties of romantic, picturesque, and grand scenery. The river fish, from the populousness of the country, and the number of fishers, are, in many parts, much diminished; but the sea is an inexhaustible source of wealth, and the coasts are enlivened by numerous inhabitants, who gain their chief subsistence from the deep. The manufactures and commerce of this country are prodigious, and absorb almost the whole attention of many classes of people. The government is a mixture of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy; the legislative power residing in the king, the house of lords, and the house of commons, but the executive power is vested solely in the king, who appoints the great officers of state, the judges, and many of even the inferior gradations of magistracy. The national church establishment is episcopal; 39 articles are interpreted by the clergy, in general, according to the liberal principles of Arminius, although the 17th article strongly savours of the Calvinistic creed. The dissenters are numerous, and of different descriptions; but most of the rigorous penal laws, which were long in force against them, have been repealed.

ENGLAND, NEW, a country of N. America, bounded on the W by New York; on the N by Canada; on the E by Nova Scotia and the Atlantic Ocean; and on the S by the same ocean and Long Island Sound. It is in many parts hilly; but the country is fertile, well cultivated, and populous. It was first settled by the Puritans, who were driven from England, at different times, by persecution. The principal productions are wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, flax, hemp, and garden vegetables. The exports are fish, timber, horses, mules, pot-ash, pearl-ash, salted beef, &c. The colleges here are in a flourishing state. It contains five states; namely, New Hampshire, Massachusets, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Vermont. The Connecticut, Merrimack, Penobscot, and Piscataway, are the principal rivers.

EPHESUS, anciently a celebrated city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, and the capital of the Roman dominions in Asia; seated at the mouth of the Castrus, and has still a good harbour, 40 m. nearly S of Smyrna. Here was the famous temple of Diana, which the ancient Christians afterwards converted into a place of public worship; but it is now so entirely ruined, that it is difficult to find the ground plot; however, there are some ruins of the walls, and 5 or 6 marble columns, all of a piece, 40 feet in length and 7 in diameter. It is now called Ajasaloue, and has still some magnificent and curious remains of its former splendour. The fortress seems to be the work of the Greek emperors. The only inhabitants are a few Greek families, who have reared huts among the ruins, to shelter themselves from the weather, and who are so illiterate, as to be unable to read, in its original language, the Epistle of Paul to their ancestors, the Ephesians. Lat. 37 52 N lon. 27 42 E.

EPINAL, a town in the depart. of Vosges, noted for its paper-mills. It is seated on the river Moselle, 35 m. SE of Nanci.

Its territory comprehends 2 towns and 73 villages, the inhabitants of which are at so small a distance from each other, that they can go, it is said, to each, and return the same day. Lat. 50 54 N lon. 11 23 E.

ERIBOL, LOCH, an arm of the sea, on the N coast of Sutherlands. affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels.

ERICHT, LOCH, a large lake in the NW of the district of Athol, in Perths. extending into Inverness. Near this place wandered the unfortunate prince Charles Stewart, after his discomfiture at Culloden, in 1746, lurking in caves and among rocks, exposed to the rigours of the climate, sometimes alone, at others with a few faithful adherents, till he at length escaped the sanguinary parties that were in search of him, lured by the offered reward. The waters of this lake descend into another, called Loch Rannoch.

Eridge, Suss. 8 m. from Grinstead. Eridge, Suss. N of Rotherbridge.

ERIE, a lake of N. America, situated between 40 50 to 43 deg. N lat. and between 78 50 to 84 W lon. It is about 260 m. long from E to W, and 40 to 60 broad. It communicates at its NE end with Lake Ontario by the Strait of Niagara. The islands and banks towards its W end are much infested with rattlesnakes; and on the leaves of the large water-lily, which grows here, covering the surface of the water to an extent of many acres, and other aquatic plants, myriads of water-snakes lie basking in the sun in the summer. Of the venomous serpents which infest the lake, the hissing snake, about 18 inches long, small and speckled, is accounted the most deadly. The wind which it blows from its mouth, if inhaled by the unwary traveller, brings on a decline, which proves mortal in a few months, no remedy being yet found to counteract its baneful influence.

Erighill Church, in Monaghan, Ulster, 66 m. from Dublin.

ESSEX, a county of England, bounded on the W by Middlesex and Herts; on the N by part of Cambridges. and the river Stour, which separates it from Suffolk; on the E by the German Ocean; and on the S by the Thames, which divides it from Kent. It is about 54 m. long from E to W, and 48 broad from N to S, and is divided into 18 hundreds, containing 26 market-towns, 403 parishes, and 252,473 inhab. It does not contain any considerable hills, but exhibits a variety of soil and face of country, generally fertile. Its SW part is occupied principally by the forests of Epping and Hainault, and is noted for its butter. The NW. part, from Saffron Walden to Cambridge, is famous for the growth of saffron. The middle part is a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and sprinkled with woods. What are called the Hundreds of Essex (though included in the hundreds of Barnstaple, Rochford, and Dengy), bordering on the Thames and the sea, consist chiefly of marshy grounds, which afford excellent pasturage, yet are deemed unwholesome; but more inland they are dry, elevated, and healthy; and even the worst part of them are rendered much healthier than formerly, by clearing the woods and draining the stagnant waters. Great numbers of calves are sent from hence to the London market, with other cattle; also fowls, wild and tame, and the oysters known by the name of Colchester oysters. The principal rivers, besides the Thames, are the Stour, which falls into the German Ocean at Harwich; the Lea, Chelmer, Blackwater, Coln, Crouch, and Roding. Chelmsford is the capital.

Etloe, Gloucest. in the parish of Lydney.

ETNA, MOUNT, or GIBELLO, a celebrated volcano in Sicily, on a mountain which is about 63 m. in circumference at the foot, and 10,954 feet in height. Not only the mountain, but all the neighbouring regions, appear to have been formed of the accumulating matter that has been ejected, from age to age, from this never-ceasing furnace. The first eruption of Etna, recorded in history, is that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, but without fixing the period when it happened: the second, however, recorded by Thucydides, happened in the year 734 before the Christian æra. From this period, to the year 1447, there were 18 more eruptions. After this it ceased to emit fire near 90 years. The next eruption was in 1536; others followed in 1537, 1567, 1603 (which continued till 1636) 1664 (which continued 14 years), 1682, 1686, 1693, 1755, 1763, 1764, 1766, 1780, and 1787. Of all these eruptions, that of 1693 was, by far, the most destructive. It was attended with an earthquake that, in an instant, overturned the town of Catania, (though 10 m. distant from the mountain), and buried no less than 18,000 persons in its ruins. Mount Etna is well cultivated all round the foot, and covered with vines on the S side; but on the N there is nothing but large forests. The top is always covered with snow, though it never ceases to smoke, and often emits flames. The cinders, which are thrown out in small quantities, serve for manure to the adjacent lands, but a large torrent does mischief; and the new apertures which are suddenly made, from time to time, are alarming and dangerous to the inhabitants.

Eton, Sussex, a little above Steyning, on the river Adur, which is navigable here for barges, carrying timber, &c. to Shoreham, for building ships.

EUPHRATES, one of the most celebrated rivers in the world, and the principal of Asiatic Turkey. It has one source about a day's journey, and another two days' journey from Erzerum. The plain of Erzerum is inclosed between these two fine streams, which, when united, form what is called the Euphrates, or the Frat. After their junction, about three days' journey from Erzerum, the united stream begins to be navigable for boats; but the channel is so rocky, that the navigation is not safe. In its course it separates Aladulia and Syria from Diabekir, and Diabekir from Arabia, after which it runs through the Irac-Arabi, till it receives the Tigris, and falls into the Persian Gulf, about 50 m. below Bussorah.

EUPHRATES, a river in the country of Whidaw, in Africa, on the Slave Coast.

EURIPICE ISLANDS, NNE of Cayenne Town and Island.

EUROPE, the least of the four general parts, or quarters of the world, is bounded on the W by the Atlantic, on the N by the Frozen Ocean, on the E by Asia, and on the S by the Black Sea and the Mediterranean. It is about 3300 m. in length, and about 2700 in breadth, and is situated between 10 deg. W and 60 E lon. and between 36 and 72 deg. N lat. As it nearly all lies within the temperate zone, here is neither the excessive heat nor the insupportable cold of other parts of the continent. Though it does not afford the richest productions of the earth, nor abound in costly mines; it is generally much more populous and better cultivated, in proportion to its extent, than the other quarters of the globe. The wild animals are but few, except in woods, rocks, and mountains of the north, and of the Alps, Apennines, and Pyrenees. The principal rivers are the Danube, the Dniester, Dnieper, Vistula, Volga, Dwina, Bog, Oby, Don, Scheldt, Rhine, Rhone, Seine, Loire, Garonne, Groyne, Tajo, Thames and Severn. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lausanne, Wenner, Ladoga, and Onega. Europe contains the countries of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Great Britain, Ireland, Russia, France, Germany, Poland, Spain, Italy, Portugal, Hungary, Switzerland, and part of Turkey, beside some islands in the Mediterranean and elsewhere. There are three empires, namely, those of Russia, Turkey, and Germany. The kings are those of Great Britain and Ireland, Spain, Portugal, Prussia, Denmark, Sweden, Sardinia, Bohemia, Hungary, and Naples, or the Two Sicilies, EUSTATIA, ST. one of the least of the Leeward Islands, in the W. Indies, about 3 leag. NW of St. Christopher. It is properly a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf: or it may be termed a huge pyramidical rock, whose top is hollow, or concave, and serves as a large den for wild animals. It is strong by situation, having but one landing place, which is difficult of access, and fortified with all the art imaginable, by its late masters, the Dutch. Tobacco is its chief production. Not less than 5000 white inhab. and about 15,000 negroes, subsist upon this island, and rear hogs, kids, rabbits, and poultry in such abundance, that they can afford to supply their neighbours, after having served themselves. In general, it serves as a storehouse for all kinds of European commodities. In 1781 it was surprised by admiral Rodney, but was soon after taken by the French, and restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1783; and now belongs to the English. Lat. 17 29 N lon. 63 5 W.

It is bounded on the W by Leitrim and Donegal; on the N by Donegal and Tyrone; on the E by Tyrone and Monaghan; and on the S by Cavan and Leitrim. It is navigable throughout its whole length, by means of the Lakes of Lough Erne; but travelling in it is difficult, in many places, by reason of the hilly, rugged, and uneven surface of the country, and the boggy grounds. The number of houses is calculated at nearly 12,000, and of the inhab. at 72,000. The linen manufacture, and raising cattle, form the chief trade of this county. There is only one linen-market in it, but the country abounds with spinners and good flax. The sales are averaged at 4100*l.* annually. Enniskillen is the capital.

FERRARA, a city and district of Italy, in the Pope's territories. The Ferrarese is now almost uncultivated, though formerly one of the finest countries in Italy. The air is unwholesome, on account of the marshes, and the inhabitants are too few to drain them. The town of Ferrara has a number of fine buildings, which evince its former opulence; but the inhabitants, who are very few, in proportion to the extent of the place, bear every mark of poverty. Ariosto lies buried here in a Benedictine convent, and Tasso was confined as an idiot in the hospital of St. Anne. It is seated on a branch of the Po, 25 m. NE of Bologna.

Ferrensby, in the parish of Farnham, Yorks. 2 m. from Knaresborough.

Ferriby, Yorks. 7 m. from Hull. Ferring, Sussex, on the coast, 4½ m. from Arundel. Ferring Ferry, Kent, opposite to the Isle of Sheppy.

FERRITER'S ISLANDS. See BLASQUES.

FERRO, or HIERO, the most westerly of the Canary Islands, remarkable for affording little water except what is supplied by the fountain tree, which grows here (its top being always covered with a thick cloud), and which distils water from its leaves in such plenty as to satisfy the wants of the inhabitants. Many voyagers, at least, speak so; but the French geographers totally deny its existence; and, indeed, this tree has been but too long the subject of a popular error. It is more probable that the inhabitants make use of what water they can collect in cisterns and reservoirs during the rainy season. Though not very fertile, the inhabitants raise corn, sugar, fruits, and legumes, and feed a great number of cattle. The western extremity of Ferro was heretofore, by common consent, accounted the place of the first meridian; but the national partialities having induced the moderns to adopt the capital of their own particular countries, as the place from which to reckon the longitude: the following is its situation according to the English, Lat. 27 47 N lon. 17 46 W.

FERRO, FARO, FAROL, or FAROER ISLANDS, 22 small islands in the Northern Ocean, subject to Denmark, of which 17 only are habitable. They occupy a length of 67 m. from N to S. Each of these is a lofty mountain, rising out of the waves, divided from the others only by a shallow brook. The highest, in Nordstrome, is 2240 feet perpendicular. Some are deeply indented with secure harbours; all are steep, and most of them exhibit tremendous precipices. The soil is shallow, but remarkably fertile; barley, the only corn grown here, yields above 20 for 1, and the grass affords abundant pasturage for sheep; but no trees, above the size of a juniper or stunted willow, are to be seen here. Vast quantities of sea-fowl frequent the rocks, the taking of which furnishes a perilous employ for the inhabitants: this and seal-catching is their principal employ. Their exports are salted mutton, tallow, goose-quills, feathers, eider down, knit woollen waistcoats, caps, and stockings. The largest island is Stromoe, 27 m. in length. The winds here are very tremendous; the climate not so cold as Denmark. Here are mines of coal. Lat. between 61 15 and 62 10 N lon. between 5 and 7 26 W.

FERROL, a strongly-fortified town of Galicia, with one of the best harbours in Spain, and even in all Europe; vessels lying secure here from all winds. It is now a marine arsenal, and the principal station for the Spanish navy, although, in 1751, it was only a small and dirty fishing-town. It is seated on a bay of the Atlantic Ocean, 20 m. NE of Corunna.

FETLAR, one of the Shetland Isles.

Fettercairn, Kincardines. 11 m. from Melrose, at the foot of the Grampian hills.

Fetteresso, Kincardines. near Stonehaven.

FETU, or AFFETU, a country on the Gold Coast of Guinea, E of Commenda. It was formerly about 160 m. in length, but is now said to be reduced to 10 m. in length and the same in breadth, being almost ruined by wars. It is a pleasant and fertile country, abounding in corn, cattle, palm wine, and oil, and is full of narrow paths, bordered with shady trees. The Dutch have a fort here.

FEVERSHAM, a very ancient town of Kent, containing about 600 houses and 4000 inhab. It has a large manufacture of gunpowder, and a considerable oyster fishery, employs a number of vessels in the coasting trade, and even sends some to Prussia, Norway, and Sweden, for fir, timber, and iron. Several hoys trade alternately from this place to London every week, with corn, hops, &c. It is seated on a creek, which is navigable for vessels of 130 tons, and which communicates with the E. Swale, 9 m. NW of Canterbury, and 48 E by S of London. Markets on Wedn. and Sat.

FEURS, a town in the depart. of Rhone and Loire, seated on the river Loire, 23 m. SW of Lyons.

Feus, a parish of Waterford, in Munster.
Feus, a ridge of mountains which run across Armagh, in Ulster.

Fewston, Yorks. W of Knaresborough.

FEZ, a large country of Barbary, in Africa, bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean; on the N by the Mediterranean Sea; on the E by Algiers and a part of Biledulgerid; and on the S by Biledulgerid, Tafilet, and Morocco. It is near 400 m. in length, and from 70 to 280 in breadth. The air is temperate and wholesome, and the country is mountainous, particularly to the W and S, near Mount Atlas. The forests abound with wild beasts, and the lions are the most daring and savage in Africa. The soil is fertile and populous, producing citrons, oranges, dates, almonds, olives, figs, raisins, sugar, honey, and corn in abundance. Here are fine breeds of camels, beeves, sheep, and other cattle; and the horses are the finest in Barbary. It is watered by several rivers and streams, and the chief town is Fez; but Sallee is the principal port for their cruisers, or rovers, which are small, but full of men.

FEZ, the capital of Fez, is one of the largest cities in Africa, 160 m. S of Gibraltar, and 210 NNE of Morocco. It is composed of three towns, Beleyde, Old Fez, and New Fez. Old Fez is the most considerable, and contains about 80,000 inhab. The palaces are magnificent, and there are a great number of mosques, adorned with marble pillars and other ornaments. Here are two colleges for students, built of marble and adorned with paintings; one of these has 100 rooms. Here are also above 100 public baths. The houses are mostly built of brick or stone, and adorned with mosaic work; those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours, like Dutch tiles, and the woodwork and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. There is a court to every house, in which are square marble basins. The roofs are flat, and the inhabitants sleep on them in the summer. The gardens are numerous, and full of fragrant flowers and shrubs. The inhabitants are clothed like the Turks. All the traders live in a separate part of the city; and the exchange is as large as a small town. From hence the caravans go to Mecca, carrying with them ready-made garments, Morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostrich feathers, for which they receive in return silks, muslins, and drugs. Other caravans go to Tombucton, and the river Niger; one of which generally consists of about 20,000 persons. They travel over such dry barren deserts, that every other camel carries water. Their commodities are felt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woollen manufactures of Barbary. Here are great numbers of Jews, but the bulk of the inhabitants are Moors, of a tawny complexion; there are also great numbers of negroes and their descendants. Lat. 34 4 N lon. 5 35 W.

FEZZAN, a country of Africa, forming a circular domain in a vast wilderness, like an island in the ocean, is bounded on the N by Tripoli; on the E by the deserts which divide it from Egypt; on the S by Bornou, or Bernoa, and Cashna; and on the W by the Deserts of Zaara, lying between 25 and 30 deg. N lat. It is an extensive plain, encompassed by mountains, except to the W. Among their tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, and a species of the domestic fowl of Europe. The wild animals are the ostrich, and antelopes of various kinds. Adders, snakes, scorpions, and toads are numerous, and sometimes crawl into their houses. The heats of summer are intense, when the wind is generally from the E and S; but if it change, as it sometimes does for a few days, to the W or N, an agreeable and reviving freshness takes place. The diseases to which the inhabitants are most subject, are those of the inflammatory and putrid kind. The small-pox is common; violent head-aches attack them in the summer, and they are troubled with rheumatic pains. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion, inclining in their persons more to the negro than the Arab cast. They are tall, but indolent and inactive. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors in Barbary. Agriculture and pasturage are the chief occupations. The houses are built of clay, with a flat roof composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. There are some venerable remains of ancient magnificence, and numerous smoking lakes, producing a species of fossil alkali, called trona. In their common intercourse, the shereef (or governor) and the poorest of the people converse familiarly, and eat and drink together. In religion they are strict but not intolerant Mahometans, and seem tolerably comfortable under their government, which is monarchical. Gold dust constitutes their chief medium of payment; and value in that medium is always expressed by weight. The sovereign, who is believed to be descended from their prophet, is tributary to the bashaw of Tripoli. Mourzouk is the capital of this country, which is said to contain 28 towns and 100 villages.

FLORENCE, a celebrated and beautiful city of Italy, the capital of Tuscany, situated in the middle of the Vale of Arno, 125 m. NNW of Rome. The prospect here is bounded on every side by an amphitheatre of fertile hills, adorned with villages, country-houses, and gardens. It was founded by the soldiers of Sylla, destroyed by Totila, and rebuilt by Charlemagne. For curiosities, this city is the principal in Italy, after Rome. The architecture of the houses, in general, is executed in a good taste, the streets are clean, and paved with large broad stones, chisseled so as to prevent the horses from sliding. The squares are spacious, and the palaces, churches, and other public structures, are in a splendid style of architecture, with pillars, statues, pyramids, and fountains, in almost every street. The city is divided into two unequal parts by the river Arno, over which there are 4 bridges, within sight of each other. That called Ponté de la Trinita is built of white marble, and adorned with 4 statues representing the seasons, and other ornaments. The Florentine merchants were formerly men of vast wealth, and one of them, about the middle of the 15th century, built that grand fabric, which, from the name of its founder, is still called the Palazzo Pitti. He failed under the prodigious expense of this building, which was immediately purchased by the Medici family, and has continued ever since to be the residence of the grand dukes. Besides the gardens, furniture, antique statues, paintings, &c. which are justly and universally admired, here are various other curiosities, as the cabinets of arts, of astronomy, of natural history, of medals, of porcelain, of antiquities, &c. In the year 1530, Alexander de Medicis was created Grand Duke of Tuscany, by the emperor Charles V. and in 1737, the family of Medicis became extinct, when Florence and the duchy of Tuscany fell to the duke of Lorraine, afterwards emperor. Florence contains a university. Lat. 43 46 N lon. 11 20 E.

FLORIDA, a country of N. America, bounded on the W by Louisiana, on the N by Louisiana and Georgia, on the E by the Atlantic, and on the S by the Gulf of Mexico. It is divided into E. and W. East Florida extends about 350 m. from N to S and 160 from E to W. West Florida is about 200 m. from E to W, and 50 from N to S. St. Augustine is the capital of the former, and Pensacola of the latter. The country about St. Augustine is the least fertile; yet even here two crops of Indian corn are annually produced. The banks of the rivers are of a superior quality, and well adapted to the culture of rice and corn. The interior country, which is high and pleasant, abounds with wood of almost every kind; particularly white and red oak, pine, hiccory, cypress, red and white cedar. The intervals between the hilly parts are extremely rich, and produce spontaneously all the fruits common to Georgia and the Carolinas. In many places, vines are successfully cultivated, and the ranges of cattle are immense. The king of Spain holds possession of Florida; but the Indians, or native Americans, are pretty numerous.

FORMELLO, a town in the Patrimonio, 10 m. NW of Rome.

FORMOSA, or TAIOUAN, an island in the Chinese Sea, separated from the province of Fokien, by a straight about 60 m. over, where narrowest. It is about 240 m. in length, and 60 where broadest, and is subject to the emperor of China, although the eastern part is mostly held by the natives. The plains are fertilised by numberless rivulets. A chain of mountains runs nearly through its whole extent from N to S. Its air is pure and wholesome, and the land produces oranges, bananas, and other Indian and European fruits. Tobacco, sugar, pepper, camphire, and cinnamon, are also common here. This island received its name of Formosa from the Europeans, on account of its singular beauty. In the spring of 1782, a great part of it was overwhelmed, and almost totally destroyed by a hurricane and inundation of the sea.

FORMOSA, an island of the Atlantic, near the coast of Africa, about 6 m. long and 3 wide. The soil is fertile, and well covered with trees, but it wants springs of good water. Lat. 11 29 N lon. 14 20 E.

FORTEVENTURA, or FUERTEVENTURA, one of the Canary Islands, about 50 m. in length, and from 8 to 24 in breadth, consisting of two peninsulas, joined together by an isthmus, about 12 m. long. The soil is fertile in wheat, barley, roots, and fruits, and beautifully diversified with hills and valleys, well watered, and supplied with a variety of timber. There is also a prodigious abundance of dates, mastic, olives, orchel for dyeing, and a species of fig-tree, that yields a medicinal balm, as white as milk. An incredible quantity of goats' milk cheese is made here, the island breeding upwards of 50,000 kids every year, whose flesh is fatter, better coloured, and sweeter than in any other country; each of them weighing between 40 and 50 pounds. It affords also plenty of beeves. There are 3 towns on the eastern coast, Langla, Tarafato, and Pozzo Negro, and there is a good road for shipping, between this island and the Island of Lobos. Lat. 28 4 N lon. 14 32 W.

FORTH, one of the finest rivers in Scotland, which rises near the bottom of the Lomond Hills. Between Stirling and Alloa, it meanders so much through a beautiful country, that it is 24 miles by water between these two places, although only 4 by land. After a course of near 40 miles it expands below Stirling into a noble estuary, called the Frith of Forth. See CANAL, GREAT.

FOX ISLANDS, a group of islands in the Northern Archipelago, 16 in number. They are seated between the E coast of Khamptschatka, and the W coast of N. America, between 52 and 55 deg. of N. lat. and are so named, on account of the great number of black, grey, and red foxes, with which they abound. The inhabitants dress in furs, and ornament their heads with showy caps. They live together in societies of families united, which form what they call a race, who mutually aid each other. The inhabitants of the same island account themselves of the same race, and each looks upon the island as a possession which is common to all individuals of the same society. They have neither chiefs nor superiors, neither laws nor punishments. They feed upon the flesh of all sorts of sea animals, and generally eat it raw. When they dress their food, they make use of a hollow stone, in which they place their fish or flesh; they then cover it with another, and close the interstices with lime or clay; they then lay it horizontally on two stones, and light a fire under it; and by this mode of cookery the meat retains more of its succulency. The meat intended for keeping, is dried without salt, in the open air. They feed their children, when very young, with the coarsest flesh, and for the most part raw. The Russians trade with them, and call their islands the Lyssie Ostrova.

Foxley, Norf. 3 m. SW of Repeham. Foxley, Wilts, 3 m. from Malmsbury. Foxton, Camb. near Harlston. Foxton, Durh. W of Foulthorp. Foxton, Leicest. 2 m. from Market Harborough. Foye, Heref. Fradley, in the parish of Alrewas, Staffords. 4 m. from Lichfield.

FRAGA, a strong town of Arragon, situated on a sharp rock, near the Cinca, 46 m. ESE of Saragossa. The gardens produce plenty of herbs and saffron, but the parts about it are barren.

Frawesden, Suff. near Debenham. Framfield, Sussex, between Ashdown Forest and Haylsham. Framilodge, Gloucest. the passage over the Severn to Newnham. Framlingham Earls, Norf. 4 m. SE of Norwich.

FRAMLINGHAM, a large, old, and but indifferently built town of Suff. with a castle, supposed to have been built by some of the kings of the E. Angles; the walls yet standing, are 44 feet high, and 8 thick, with 13 towers above them. Here the princess Mary retired, before her elevation to the crown, on the death of her brother, Edward VI. It is noted for a large, stately church, built all of black flint, and is pleasantly situated in a fruitful soil and healthy air, near the source of the river Ore (by some called Wincknill), 30 m. E of Bury, and 88 m. NE of London. Market on Sat.

Framlington, Northumb. a member of the manor of Felton. Frampton, Dorsets. seated on the river Frome, which abounds with excellent trout, 12 m. NW of Weymouth, and 120 W by S of London; its market is disused. Frampton, Gloucest. between Stroud and the head of the Isis. Frampton, Linc. S of Boston. Frampton, Berks, in E. Hendred parish. Frampton Cotterel, Gloucest. 5 m. SW of Sodbury. Frampton upon Severn, a parish of Gloucest. between Berkeley and Newnham. Framsden, Suff. 9 m. from Ipswich. Framwellgate, in the parish of St. Oswald, in the city of Durham.

FRANCE, is a country of Europe, bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by the English Channel, the German Ocean, and Holland; on the E by Germany, Switzerland, and Piedmont; and on the S by the Mediterranean Sea and Pyrenean Mountains; extending from 4 48 W to 8 22 E lon. and from 42 24 to 51 24 N. lat. From Spain, on the S, to Holland, its extent is nearly 700 m.; and about 650 from the most easterly part of the depart. of the Lower Rhine, to the westerly part of that of Finisterre. The air, particularly in the interior parts of the country, is, in general, mild and wholesome, and their weather more clear and settled than in England: in the northern provinces, however, the winters are intensely cold. The soil is agreeably diversified, and yields corn, wine, and oil; figs, prunes, and various highly-flavoured fruits; tobacco, hemp, flax, manna, saffron, and many drugs. Silk is also produced in great plenty. The forests are extensive, and the mineral productions various. Its situation is favourable to commerce, and the inhabitants have long availed themselves of many of their natural advantages. The principal rivers of France are the Loire, the Rhone, the Garonne, the Seine, the Scheldt, the Rhine, the Somme, the Var, the Adour, &c. the advantages of which, in commerce and conveniency, are considerably improved by the artificial rivers and canals which have been executed. The most considerable mountains, besides the Alps and Pyrenees, are Mount Jura, the Cevennes, and Mount Dor. Wolves excepted, France contains few animals, wild or tame, that are not to be found in England. The present government of France is a monarchy. The French, in their manners, appear more affable and easy than their neighbours in the east; less trifling and ceremonious than those on the south; and not so absorbed in the pursuit of gain as the English and Dutch. Their language is more generally spoken than any other in the world, and of late the Catholic religion has been re-established. The population of France is computed at 26 millions.

FRANCE, ISLE OF, or MAURITIUS, an island in the Indian Ocean, about 45 leag. in circumference. Indigo is the general object of cultivation, and attempts have been made to rear cochineal, as the island abounds with the plant on which the insects lie, but a small bird is sure to destroy them. Its ebony is the most solid, close, and shining of any in the world. Here are numerous groves of oranges and citrons, and the pineapple grows spontaneously in great perfection. Here is also abundance of black cattle, venison, and wild fowl, with potatoes and other leguminous roots. There are two fine harbours, one on the E side, and the other on the W. This island was first discovered by the Dutch, in 1598, who gave it the name of Mauritius, in honour of the Prince of Orange. About 40 years after, they began to form settlements here, but in the beginning of the present century the colony was withdrawn, and the island was taken possession of by the French, in whose hands it remained till taken by the English in 1810. The inhabitants, black and white, amount to 70,000. Lat. 20 10 S lon. 57 29 E.

FRANCKFORT ON THE MAINE, a free imperial city of Franconia, noted for its two great annual fairs, seated on the river Maine, which divides it in two parts, 15 m. NE of Mentz, and 350 W by N of Vienna. The Calvinists and Jews here are numerous, industrious, and rich, but lie under divers sumptuary restrictions. The magistrates are Lutherans. Lat. 50 1 N lon. 8 22 E.

FRANCKFORT ON THE ODER, a town of the Middle Marche, in Brandenburg, formerly imperial, but now subject to the king of Prussia, situated on the river Oder, 48 m. SE of Berlin. It is remarkable for its three great fairs, and its university. Lat. 52 23 N lon. 14 39 N.

FRIENDLY ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the South Pacific Ocean, so named by Captain Cook, in 1773, on account of the friendship that seemed to subsist among the inhabitants, and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, the Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1643, and gave the names of New Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Cook explored the whole cluster, consisting of more than 60. New Amsterdam is the largest, extending 21 m. from E to W, and 13 from N to S. It is intersected by straight and pleasant roads, with fruit trees on each side, which provide shade from the scorching heat of the sun. Middleburg is called Eooa by the natives, who have given the names of Annamooka, Tongataboo, Hapee, and Lefooga, to the other principal islands. The general appearance of these islands conveys an idea of exuberant fertility; the surface, at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are uncommonly large, particularly the tall cocoa palm, and a species of fig, with narrow-pointed leaves. It is almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest vegetable productions; such as bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, plantains, yams, sugar-cane, and a fruit like nectarine. Here are most of the articles which the Society

Islands produce, and some which they have not. Their breed of hogs is as scanty as those of the Society Islands; but they received from the English some valuable additions to their stock, both of vegetables and animals. Their domestic fowls are as large as those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and parroquets, of various sorts, which furnish the red feathers so much esteemed in the Society Isles. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter to an immense variety of shell-fish. Agriculture, architecture, boat-building, and fishing, are the employments of the men; to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth. These islands lie between 19 40 and 21 30 deg. S lat. and between 170 and 180 of W lon. Under the general name of Friendly Islands, are sometimes comprehended Boscawen's, Keppel's, and Prince William's Islands, and the group of the Hapaee Islands, amounting altogether to about 150.

FRIESLAND, EAST, a principality of Germany, bounded on the N by the German Ocean; on the E by the county of Oldenburg; on the S by the bishopric of Munster; and on the W and SW by the sea and Groningen. It consists chiefly of meadow land, and is subject to Prussia. The counts of Friesland becoming extinct in 1744, Frederick II. king of Prussia, seized the country in consequence of the expectancy granted to the house of Brandenburg, in 1694, by the emperor Leopold. George II. however, king of England, as duke of Brunswick Lunenburg, laid claim to the principality, on account of an hereditary union entered into, in 1691, with prince Christian Erbehard, making his pretensions known to the regency of E. Friesland, and the aulic chamber of the empire: but the king of Prussia, denying the authority of the emperor or regency, and threatening to support his actions by force of arms, he was suffered to remain in possession.

FRIESLAND, WEST, one of the provinces of Holland, bounded on the S and W by the Zuyder Zee and Overyssel; on the N by the German Ocean; and on the E by Groningen and Overyssel. In Oostergow there is good pasturage, and some arable land; Westergow is more fenny, but abounds with fish and fowl. There is a dialect used here more nearly resembling the old English than any other in Europe. A part of North Holland is also called West Friesland.

FUEGO, FOGO, or ST. PHILIP, one of the Cape de Verd Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, higher than any of the rest, and appearing, at sea, to be one single mountain, though on the sides there are deep valleys. There is a volcano at the top of it, which burns continually, vomiting out the fire and smoke, throwing up huge pieces of rock to a vast height, and sometimes pouring vast torrents of brimstone down the side of the hill. The Portuguese who first inhabited it, brought negroes with them, and a stock of cows, horses, and hogs; but their descendants are not now distinguishable in their complexions from the negroes. The island is without rivers, and almost without fresh water, yet it is fertile in maize, gourds, water-melons, wild-figs, oranges and apples. A great number of goats run wild upon the mountains, and the profit on their skins is a revenue of the crown. They export, also, the skins of cattle, horses, asses, and hogs. The island is nearly 5 leag. in length, and is about 330 m. W of Cape de Verd, and 90 W of St. Jago. Lat. 15 10 N lon. 24 20 W.

FUMAY, a town in the depart. of the Ardennes, noted for quarries of excellent slates in the neighbourhood.

FUNCHAL, or FUNCHIAL, a town, capital of the island of Madeira, situated on the S coast, on the gentle ascent of a hill, in the form of an amphitheatre. The buildings are, in general, entirely white. The hills beyond the town are covered with vineyards, inclosures, plantations, and groves, interspersed with country-houses and other buildings. The city contains 6 parish churches and several chapels, 6 convents, and several hospitals. The streets are narrow, ill-paved, and dirty, yet all drawn by a line; the houses are also neat, being built of freestone, or of brick: but only a few of the best, which belong to the wealthier inhabitants, are provided with glass windows; the others have a kind of lattice-work in their stead, which hang on hinges, and may be lifted up occasionally. The English and French Roman catholics, who live in the Portuguese manner, exceed the Portuguese here in numbers and opulence. There is also a number of mulatto and negro freemen. The principal trade of the inhabitants consists in wine and sweetmeats. On the sea-side are several batteries. An old castle, which commands the road, stands on the top of a steep, black rock, surrounded by the sea at high-water, called Loo Rock. On a neighbouring eminence, above the town, is another, called St. John's Castle. Lat. 32 38 N lon. 16 49 W.

FUTTYPOUR, or FATTIPOUR SICRI, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, seated near an immense plain, in which scarcely a shrub is to be seen; 42 m. W of Agra. The soil is light, and almost as fine as hair-powder; a circumstance productive of disagreeable effects, when this fine dust is taken up by the hot winds from the westward. The country, near the town, is in tolerable cultivation. Lat. 27 10 N lon. 78 8 E.

FYAL, or FAYAL, the most westerly island of the Azores, or Western Islands, about 27 m. in length and 9 in breadth. The climate is remarkably good, and the air always pure and mild. The cold of winter is never felt here, and the heat of summer is constantly tempered by refreshing winds from the sea. This island produces plenty of pasture for cattle, and plenty of fish are caught on the coast. It is also well cultivated, and yields wheat of the bearded sort, barley, Indian corn, cucumbers, gourds, melons, water-melons, flax, lemons, oranges, plums, apricots, figs, pears, apples, cabbages, carrots, potatoes, large sweet onions, garlic, and strawberries. There are a few vineyards on the island, but the quantity of wine is inconsiderable, and the quality indifferent. Here is also abundance of chesnuts, beeches, myrtles, and aspen trees. Their oxen are small, as are also their sheep, but the meat is very good; and they have plenty of long-legged goats, hogs, and poultry. Their horses are small and ill-looking; but asses and mules are more numerous and more serviceable in such a hilly country. Birds here are numerous, and in great variety; particularly quails, American woodcocks, canary-birds, black-birds, and other birds of song, with a small species of hawks. The cottages of the common people are built of clay, and thatched with straw; they are small, but cleanly and cool. The most considerable, if not only town, is Villa de Horta. Lat. 38 32 N lon. 28 45 W.

Fyans Town Bridge, in Meath, Leinster, 30 m. from Dublin.

FYERS, a river of Inverness-sh. which runs into Loch Ness, 10 m. NE of Fort Augustus. Over this river is built a stupendous bridge, on two opposite rocks; the top of the arch being above 100 feet from the level of the water.

GALACZ, a town of Bulgaria, near the mouths of the Danube, 54 m. W of Ismael.

Galashiels, a village of Selkirks. near the confluence of the Gala and the Tweed, 4 m. from Melrose. A flourishing manufacture of woollen cloth is carried on here, called Galashiel's grey, being of a dark colour and coarse texture; and lately flannels and finer cloths have been tried here with tolerable success.

GALALO, a river of Otranto, in Naples, which falls into the sea near Tarento.

GALATA, the principal suburb of Constantinople, seated opposite the seraglio, on the other side of the harbour. It is inhabited by Christians and Jews, who here exercise their religious profession publicly. The houses are better built here than in Constantinople, and wine is sold in taverns, which is not allowed in the city itself.

Galaton, in the parish of Dysart, Fifes.

Galby, 7 m. from Leicest.

Galhally, in Limerick, Munster.

Galey, Leices. S of Billesdon. Gales, Yorks. N. Riding, W of Ravensworth Castle.

GALEGA, an island in the South Sea, 12 m. in length and 1 m. in breadth, covered with cocoa nut and palm trees. A few inhabitants have settled here for making cocoa nut oil, which they take to the Isle of France. Lat. 10 31 S lon. 56 48 E.

GALEY RIVER, rises in Limerick, runs into Kerry, and falls at last into the river Feal.

GALFALLEY, a town of Tipperary, Ireland.

GALICIA, a name given to a country in the S and SW of Poland, consisting of that part of Little Poland which is S of the river Vistula, almost the whole of Red Russia, and a slip of Podolia. It is now incorporated into the Austrian dominions under the appellation of the kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria. The mountainous parts produce fine pasture; the plains are mostly sandy, but abound in forests, and are fertile in corn. The principal articles of traffic are cattle, hides, wax, and honey, copper, lead, iron, and salt. It extends from E to W about 280 m. in length, and from 60 to 100 in breadth. Lemburg or Leopold is the capital.

GALICIA, a mountainous province of Spain, bounded on the N and W by the sea; on the E by Asturia and Leon; and on the S by Portugal. It has more harbours than any other province of Spain, and the forests yield wood for ship-building. The principal produce is wine, flax, and citrons; and here are also good pastures. The population is not numerous. The mineral productions are copper and lead; Corunna and Ferrol are the principal ports, and St. Jago di Compostella is the capital.

GALICIA, NEW, or GAUDALAJARA, an audience of Mexico, which contains a province of the same name, and 5 others. The air is temperate; and there is abundance of corn and pulse; here are also mines of silver and copper. The principal towns are Zamora, Leon, Lagos, and Guanamota.

GALILEE, a province of Palestine, anciently a part of Judea. Its bounds are not exactly known.

GALISTIO, a town of Spanish Estramadura, 10 m. E of Goria.

GALL, ST. or ST. GALLEN, a considerable town of the Thurgau, in Switzerland. The inhabitants are uncommonly industrious, and carry on an extensive commerce, arising from their manufactures of linen, muslin, and embroidery. Here is a rich and celebrated abbey, whose abbot is chosen by the 72 Benedictines, who compose the chapter. The government of the town, which is entirely Protestant, is aristo-democratical; the subjects of the abbot, whose territory is distinct, are Catholics. To the library belonging to the abbey, we are indebted for the preservation of the famous writings of Petronius Arbiter, Silius Italicus, Valerius Flaccus, and Quintilian, copies of which were found here in 1423. The town is seated in a valley, between two mountains, 57 m. NE of Zurich. Lat. 47 26 N lon. 9 20 E.

GALLA, or PUNTA DE GALLO, a settlement in Ceylon, situated in a healthy air, on the SW coast, about 98 m. S of Candy. The bay is said to be neither large nor convenient, and the entrance is dangerous on account of rocks.

GALLINARA. See ALBENGA.

GALLIPAGO ISLANDS, in the S. Sea, lying on both sides of the equator, in lon. between 85 and 90 deg. W were discovered by the Spaniards, who call here for fresh water and provisions on their passage between Asia and America. They are uninhabited; but here are great numbers of birds and excellent tortoises. There are 14 or 15 of these islands at least, and there are others of the same name more to the W.

GALLIPOLI, a sea-port of Naples, seated on a rock, surrounded by the sea, and joined to the main land by a bridge, 21 m. W of Otranto, in the Gulf of Tarento. Lat. 40 20 N lon. 18 9 E.

GALLIPOLI, a town of Romania, 100 m. WSW of Constantinople, at or near the ancient ABYDOS, on the Dardanelles, with a good harbour, at the entrance of the Sea of Marmora. It contains about 10,000 Turks, and 3500 Greeks, besides a great number of Jews. Lat. 40 53 N lon. 27 15 E.

GALWAY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, about 75 m. long and 45 broad. It is bounded on the N by the counties of Mayo and Roscommon; on the E by Roscommon, King's County, and Tipperary; on the S by Clare and Galway Bay; and on the W by the Atlantic Ocean. It contains 28 churches, 116 parishes, about 28,212 houses, and 142,000 inhab. A great part of it is fertile, being a warm, limestone soil, which rewards the industry of the husbandman and shepherd, but is very coarse towards the N and W, and in those parts rather thinly inhabited. The western coast contains many well-sheltered harbours, and is mostly bordered with green islands and rugged rocks.

GALWAY, a town of Ireland, in a county of the same name, of which it is the capital, 49 m. WSW of Athlone, and 108 W by S of Dublin. It is advantageously situated for foreign trade on Galway Bay. The salmon and herring fisheries are carried on here with great spirit, and employ several hundred boats; the quantity of kelp manufactured and exported is considerable, and the increase of the linen manufacture, though of late introduction, is become very important.

GALWAY BAY, a large bay on the coast of Galway, Connaught. The north side of it is foul and dangerous for vessels; but it is more safe on the S side. Small ships only can sail up to the town of Galway.

GAMBIA, a large river of Africa, which falls into the Atlantic Ocean. The source is not known, but it is navigable for sloops about 600 m. up the country. At the mouth of the river the land is low, but, higher up, the country is rocky and mountainous, and covered with woods. Along its banks are great numbers of towns inhabited by various nations. The Arabic language and Mahometan religion generally prevail in the country N of this river: on the S the inhabitants are Pagans. The Gambia annually overflows its banks, like the Nile. The mouth is in lat. 13 28 N lon. 16 20 W.

Ganerew, Heref. 3 m. from Monmouth.

Ganford, Durh. near Barnard Castle.

GANGES, a large and celebrated river of India, has its source in two springs, near Mount Kentaiffe, in Thibet; these streams after running 500 m. in a western direction, inclining to the N, turn to the S, unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges, from the Hindoo word Ganga, which signifies the river. This great body of water now forces a passage through Mount Himmalech, (a chain or ridge of mountains extending from Cabul along the N of Hindoostan, and through Thibet) and sapping its very foundations, rushes through a cavern, and precipitates itself into a vast basin, which it has worn in the rock, at the hither foot of the mountains. From this second source of the Ganges, it takes a SE direction through the country of Sirimagur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes the mountainous tract in which it has wandered about 800 m. Thence it enters the plain country, flows with a smooth, navigable stream, during the remainder of its course to the Bay of Bengal, which it enters by several mouths. In its course through these delightful plains, it passes by Furruckabad, Allahabad, Benares, Patna, &c. and receives 11 rivers, some of which are equal to the Rhine, and none smaller than the Thames, besides others of an inferior note. In the annual inundation of this immense river, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 m. in width; nothing appearing above water but villages and trees, excepting, very rarely, the top of an elevated spot, the artificial mound of some deserted village, which appears like an island. The rise of the water is on an average about 31 feet. The Ganges is a most beneficial river, diffusing plenty by means of its living productions, enriching the lands, and affording an easy conveyance for the produce of its borders. The Hindoos hold its waters in high veneration. It is visited annually by pilgrims from all parts of Hindoostan, and happy are those accounted whose lot it may be to perish in its streams.

GANJAM, a town of Hindoostan, in Cicacola, one of the northern circars, subject to the English. It lies on the Bay of Bengal, near the SW end of Chilka Lake. Lat. 19 22 N lon. 85 20 E.

GARD, a depart. of France, bounded on the N by the departments of Lozere and Ardeche; on the E by the Rhone, near its mouth; on the S by the Mediterranean and part of the depart. of Herault; and on the W by the departments of Lozere, Aveiron, and Herault, Nismes is the principal town.

GARD, PONT DE, an ancient Roman aqueduct in France, 9 m. NE of Nismes, erected, it is supposed, by Agrippa, in order to convey to Nismes the water of the spring of Eure, which rises near Uzes. It is 160 feet in height, and consists of three bridges, reared one upon another, so as to unite two craggy mountains.

The uppermost of these bridges has six arches of great blocks of stone, without cement; the centre-bridge, on which this stands, has eleven, and the lowest (under which runs the Gard, an inconsiderable but rapid river) has thirty-six arches. Louis XIV. when he repaired, in 1699, the damages which this stupendous work had sustained by time, caused a real bridge, over which travellers now pass, to be constructed by the side of the lower range of arches.

GARDA, a town of Italy, in the Veronese; and a lake between the Veronese and the Bressan, about 30 m. long, and from 2 to 7 wide.

GENEP, a town in the ci-devant Austrian Brabant.

GENEVA, an ancient, large, and populous city, on the confines of France, Savoy, and Swisserland, 40 m. NE of Chamberry, and 126 NW of Turin. It is seated at the SW extremity of the lake of the same name, and is divided by the Rhone, which passes through the lake, into two unequal parts. Geneva, which lies partly in the plain on the borders of the lake, and partly on a gentle ascent, is irregularly built. The houses are lofty; and many that stand in the trading parts of the city have arcades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. These, arcades, supported by pillars, give a gloomy appearance to the street, but are useful to the inhabitants in protecting them from the sun and rain. It contains about 24,000 people; but the territory or district is small. They are in alliance with the Swiss Cantons, and after various revolutions, with which they have been agitated from time to time for near two centuries, the democrats, in 1789, prevailed over the aristocracy, of which the senate and syndics, or chief magistrates, were composed. A constitution was lately established here, favourable to the rights of the people, and perhaps judiciously modelled between the two extremes; but it now forms an integral part of the French empire. The citizens of both sexes are remarkably well instructed, "and it is not uncommon," says Dr. Moore, "to find mechanics, in the intervals of labour, amusing themselves with the works of Locke, Montesquieu, Newton, and other similar productions." Lat. 46 12 N lon. 6 10 E.

GENEVA, LAKE OF, an expanse of water between Swisserland and Savoy, extending from Geneva to Villeneuve, 54 m. in length, and 12 in breadth, in its widest part. From Geneva to the environs of Lausanne, the country slopes for a considerable way, to the margin of the lake, and is enriched with a variety and profusion of natural beauties. Near Lausanne, the banks rise considerably and form a terrace; a few miles beyond the town is a rapid descent. The colour of the water is extremely beautiful, clear, and at a distance seems of a fine blue. The depth is various: the greatest yet found, by sounding, is 160 fathoms. It abounds in fish, remarkable for their excellence as well as size. Like all inland lakes, inclosed within high mountains, it is subject to sudden storms. Among the birds which frequent this lake, are the tippet grebes, which appear only in the winter. They are obliged to build in other places, this lake being almost destitute of reeds and rushes, in which they form their floating nests.

GENGENBACH, an imperial town of the Ortenau, in Suabia.

GENGOUX DE ROYAL, ST. a town in the depart. of the Saone and Loire, remarkable for its excellent wines. It is 17 m. SW of Chalons.

Gennis, Cornw, NE of Boscastle.

GENOA, a city of Italy, capital of a republic of the same name, 62 m. SE of Turin, and 224 NW of Rome. It is about 10 m. in circumference, and built like an amphitheatre. The houses are five or six stories high, and well built, and the palaces and public buildings are numerous. The harbour is large and good, and, to preserve it, they have built a mole 560 paces in length, 13 in breadth, and 15 feet above the level of the water. It is populous, and one of the most commercial places in Italy. They have manufactures in velvet, plush, damask, and silk; and the banking business is carried on extensively. The ordinary revenue of this republic is about 200,000*l.* a-year. The government is purely aristocratic. There is a great council, consisting of 80 persons, chosen out of the old and new nobility, in whom the legislative authority resides, but the administration of affairs is vested in a senate, consisting of a doge and 2 senators. The nobility are often employed in trade, and generally keep two or three years' provision of corn, wine, and oil in their magazines, which they sell to the people in scarce times. The Genoese fleet, anciently celebrated for its victories over the Saracens, Pisanese, Venetians, Spaniards, and Turks, and a long time masters of Sardinia, Malta, Majorca, Minorca, Candia, Cyprus, the Crimea, and other places in the Archipelago, is now reduced to a few galleys.

GENOA, the republic, extends along the Gulf of Genoa for about 120 m.; but its breadth is unequal, varying from 8 to nearly 20 m. On the land side it is bounded by Piedmont, Montserat, Milan, Placentia, Parma, and Modena. It is populous, well cultivated, and fertile near the sea; but the inner parts are mountainous and barren.

GEORGIA, a fertile country of Asia, called by the Persians Gurgistan, and by the Turks Gurtshi, is situated between the Black and Caspian Seas, and comprehends the ancient Iberia, and part of Colchis. It is surrounded by the Russian Government of Caucasus, Circassia, Daghestan, Schirvan, and Armenia. It is divided into 9 provinces. Of these, 5 form the kingdom of Georgia; the other 4 form the principality of Imeritia. The hills are covered with forests of beech, oak, ash, chesnuts, walnuts, and elms, encircled with vines, growing spontaneously, and producing vast quantities of grapes. Cotton also grows spontaneously, as well as the finest fruit trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The valleys afford fine pasturage, the rivers are full of fish, the mountains abound with minerals, and the climate is delicious. The rivers, however, being fed by torrents, are always too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation. Georgia was formerly one kingdom, the inhabitants of which were Christians; but since 1639, when it was conquered by the Persians, the country is divided between two native princes, by themselves called kings, but by the sophi styled governors. Each of these has a guard of Mahometan horse in their pay. The Georgians are skilled in the use of the bow, and are thought to be the best soldiers in Asia. Their dress resembles that of the Cossacks; but those that are wealthy affect the habit of the Persians. They usually dye their hair, beards, and nails red. The women, who are celebrated for their beauty, stain the palms of their hands of the same colour, and paint their eyebrows black, in such a manner as to form one entire line, while the rest of the face is coated with white and red. Being generally educated in convents, they can read and write, qualifications uncommon with the men, even of the highest rank. The inhabitants are Christians, partly of the Greek, partly of the Armenian church. Here are also Tartars, Ossi, Armenians, and a considerable number of Jews. Of these last, some have villages of their own; others are mixed with the Georgian, Armenian, and Tartarian inhabitants, but never with the Ossi. They pay a small tribute above that of the natives. There are only four considerable towns, Teflis, Gori, Suram, and Ali.

GEORGIA, the most southern of the United States of N. America, is bounded on the E by the Atlantic Ocean; on the S by E. and W. Florida; on the W by that part of Louisiana which lies to the E of the river Mississippi; and on the N by S. Carolina and the Tenassee government. It extends about 420 m. from E to W, and from 140 to 240 from N to S. It is divided into 11 counties, Chatham, Effingham, Burke, Richmond, Wilkes, Liberty, Glynn, Camden, Washington, Greene, and Franklin, and contains 252,433 inhab. The whole coast is bordered with islands, which, as well as the continent, being well wooded, the channel between them is extremely pleasant. The principal towns are Augusta, Savannah, Brunswick, Sunbury, Frederica, Washington, and Louisville. The principal rivers are the Savannah, Ogeechee, Alatamaha, St. Mary, &c. The winters are mild and pleasant, ice and snow being seldom seen. The soil varies according to situation and different degrees of improvement. It produces rice, indigo, cotton, silk, Indian corn, potatoes, oranges, figs, pomegranates, &c. Rice, at present, is the staple commodity; but great attention begins to be paid to the raising of tobacco. Augusta is the capital.

GEORGIA, SOUTH, the principal of a cluster of islands in the S. Atlantic Ocean, discovered by captain Cook, in 1775, and so named by him. It is 31 leag. long, and its greatest breadth is about 10. It abounds in bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. Two rocky islands are situated at the N end, one of which was a craggy cliff, nearly perpendicular, containing the nests of many thousand shags; the other was called the Bird Island, from the innumerable flocks of birds seen near it, from the largest albatrosses down to the least petterels. Several porpoises and seals were also observed. Here are perpendicular ice cliffs of considerable height, like those of Spitsbergen. From these, pieces were continually breaking off, and floating out to sea; the valleys were covered with snow, and the only vegetation observed, was a bladed grass growing in tufts, wild burnet, and a plant like moss. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast. A great number of sea-calves and sea-bears were found, and flocks of penguins, some of which weighed 38 pounds, and measured 3 feet 3 inches in length. The only bird seen, appeared to be a species of the lark: no quadruped was found. These islands lie between 53 57 and 54 57 S lat. and between 38 13 and 35 34 W lon.

GERMANY, a country of Europe, bounded on the W by Switzerland, France, the Belgic Provinces, and the German Ocean; on the N by Sleswick and the Baltic Sea; on the E by Prussia, Poland, and Hungary; and on the S by Hungary, the Adriatic, Italy, and Switzerland; being about 640 m. in length, and 550 in breadth. The air is temperate and wholesome, and the productions are various. Germany contains many princes, secular and ecclesiastic, who are independent of each other, and there are great numbers of free, imperial cities, which are so many little republics, governed by their own laws, and united by a head, who has the title of emperor. The prerogatives of the imperial dignity were formerly much more extensive than they are at present. At the close of the Saxon race, in 1024, the emperors exercised the right of conferring all ecclesiastical benefices in Germany, of receiving their revenues during a vacancy, of succeeding to the effects of intestate ecclesiastics, of confirming or annulling the election of the popes, of assembling councils, and of appointing them to decide on the affairs of the church; of conferring the title of king on their vassals, of granting vacant fiefs, of receiving the revenues of the empire; of governing Italy as its proper sovereigns; of erecting free cities; and establishing fairs; of assembling the diets of the empire, and fixing the time of their duration; of coining money, and conferring the same privilege on the states of the empire; and of administering justice within the territories of the different states. About the year 1437, however, the emperors were reduced to the power of conferring all dignities and titles, except the privilege of being a state of the empire; of appointing once, during their reign, a dignitary in each chapter, or religious house; of granting dispensations with respect to the age of majority; of erecting cities, and conferring the privilege of coining money, and of calling the meetings of the diet, and presiding in them. The electors of the empire are 3 ecclesiastical, namely, the archbishops of Treves, Cologne, and Mentz; and 5 secular, namely, the king of Prussia, as elector of Brandenburgh; the king of Great Britain, as elector of Hanover; the present emperor, as king of Bohemia; the elector of Saxony; and the elector palatine of the Rhine. Each elector bears the title of one of the principal officers of the empire; the elector of Hanover, for instance, being "arch-treasurer and elector of the holy Roman empire." To prevent the calamities of a contested election, a king of the Romans has often been chosen in the life-time of the emperor, on whose death he succeeds to the imperial dignity as a circumstance of course. Although chief of the empire, the supreme authority resides in the diets, which are composed of 3 colleges, that of the electors, that of the princes, and that of the imperial towns. When that of the electors and that of the princes disagree, that of the towns cannot decide the difference; but they are obliged to give their consent, when they are of the same opinion. The diets have the power of making peace or war, of settling general impositions, and of regulating all the important affairs of the empire. But their decisions have not the force of law till the emperor gives his consent. All the sovereigns of Germany have an absolute authority in their own dominions, and can lay taxes, levy troops, make alliances, &c. provided they do not prejudice the empire. They determine all causes definitively, unless in some particular cases, in which an appeal may be made. These appeals are to two courts, called the Imperial Chamber and the Aulic Council. Germany is divided into 9 circles, each of which comprehends several other states; the princes, prelates, and counts of which, with the deputies of the imperial towns, meet together about their common affairs. Each circle has one or two directors and a colonel; the directors have a power of convoking the assembly of the states of their circle, and the colonel commands the army. The 9 circles are those of Austria, Bavaria, Suabia, Francona, Upper and Lower Rhine, Westphalia, and Upper and Lower Saxony. The principal rivers are the Danube, Rhine, Elbe, Weser, Maine, and Oder. The language of Germany is a dialect of the Teutonic, which succeeded that called the Celtic. The 3 principal religious professions are the Romish, Lutheran, and Calvinistic. The first prevails in the dominions of the emperor, in the ecclesiastical electorates, and in Bavaria; the second in the circles of Upper and Lower Saxony, great part of Westphalia, Franconia, Suabia, the Upper Rhine, and in most of the imperial towns; the third in the dominions of the landgrave of Hesse Cassel, and of some other princes.

GESTRICIA, or GESTRIKE, a province of Sweden, bounded on the N by Helsingland; on the E by the Gulf of Bothnia; on the S by Upland, Westmanland, and Dalecarlia; and on the W by Dalecarlia. It is richly diversified by an alternate succession of forests, rocks, hills, and dales, pasture and arable land, lakes and rivers. The beauty of the landscape is greatly heightened by the Dahl, the finest river in Sweden, which meanders through the whole extent of this province. The inhabitants do not much concern themselves with agriculture, deriving their principal support from the mines, forges, forests, lakes, and rivers. Gefle is the capital.

GEVAUDAN, a ci-devant mountainous barren territory of Languedoc, S of Auvergne, and E of Rouergue. Mende was the capital.

GEVER. See GOWER.

Gewendale, Yorks. near Rippon.

GHENT, a considerable city of Austrian Flanders, seated on the confluence of the rivers Scheldt, Lis, Moeze, and Lieve, 26 m. NW of Brussels, and 30 from Antwerp, containing 6 parish churches, besides the cathedral, a great many religious houses, and about 70,000 inhab. but not populous in proportion to its extent, which is so great, that Charles V. is reported to have said to the French king, Francis I.

"I have a glove," (the French name for Ghent being gand, a glove,) "in which I can put your whole city of Paris." The city is divided by canals into 26 islands, and over the canals there are 300 bridges. The streets are large, and the market-place is spacious. They have flourishing manufactures of silk, woollen, linen, and a great trade in corn. There is a large canal which passes from Ghent to Bruges, and thence to Ostend; and another which passes to Sas de Ghent. Lat. 51 3 N lon. 3 49 E.

GHERGONG, a city of India, capital of the kingdom of Assam, seated on a river which runs a little below into the Burrampooter, about 400 m. NE of Calcutta. Lat. 26 25 N lon. 93 40 E.

GHERIAH, a town of Hindoostan, situated on the W side, or Pirate Coast, in the country of Concan. It was the principal port of Angria, a famous piratical prince, whose fort here was taken, and his whole fleet destroyed, by Admiral Watson and Colonel Clive, in conjunction with the Mahrattas, in 1756. It is about 80 m. NNW of Goa. Lat. 16 45 N lon. 73 7 E.

GHILAN, a beautiful province of Persia Proper, extending along the SW coast of the Caspian Sea, and supposed to be the Hyrcania of the ancients. It has Schirvan to the N, Aderbeitzan and part of Irac Agemi to the W, and Mezanderan to the SE, and is about 200 m. long and 150 broad. The sea forms its boundary on one side, and on the other are high mountains, covered with various sorts of fruit-trees. In the highest parts of them are deers, bears, wolves, leopards, and tigers, which last the Persians have, it is said, a method of taming, and hunt with them as with dogs. It is extremely fertile, producing silk, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, mulberry, box, walnut-trees, and excellent fruits in abundance. This province was ceded to Russia in 1723, but not formally annexed to the Russian dominions till 1780. Reshed is the capital.

GHILAN, ST. or GUISLAIN, a town in the depart. of the North, seated on the river Haine, 5 m. W of Mons.

Gibbon's Grove, in Cork, Munster, 3 m. S of Charleville.

GIBRALBON, a town of Spain, on the river Odiel, 44 m. W of Seville, with a small harbour.

GIBRALTAR, a town of Andalusia, in Spain, near a mountain of the same name, formerly called Calpe, which, with Mount Abyla, on the opposite shore of Africa, were called the Pillars of Hercules. It has been in the possession of the English since the year 1704, who keep a garrison here, which is cooped up in very narrow limits, and receives supplies of provisions from England and Barbary. The town is so strong by art and nature, as probably to bid defiance to the utmost efforts of an enemy. Here are upwards of 300 pieces of cannon mounted on the works. Gibraltar contains several streets, one of which is pretty spacious and well paved; the others are narrow and dirty. It has also 3 gates. It is built at the foot of a barren rock, or craggy hill, which rises about 1400 feet above the level of the sea, in a peninsula, which can be approached only by a narrow passage, between the mountain and the sea. Across this isthmus the Spaniards have drawn a fortified line, to prevent the garrison from having any communication with the country. The English here, exclusive of the garrison, amount to about 2000, and the Spaniards, Portuguese, Genoese, and Jews, to as many more. Here is one English and one Spanish church, and a Jews' synagogue. The road here is not safe against storms, nor convenient for refitting vessels, though they may be laid on their sides for careening; the harbour is formed by 2 moles, one of which is 300 feet in length. On the summit of the rock is a plain, where there is a fine prospect of the sea, on each side the Strait, of Barbary, Fez, and Morocco, and of Seville and Grenada, in Spain. The Strait of Gibraltar is about 24 m. in length and 15 in breadth, and a strong current always runs through it from the ocean to the Mediterranean. Gibraltar is 25 m. N of Ceuta, and 49 SE of Cadiz. Lat. 36 6 N lon. 5 22 W.

GIBRALTAR, a town of Venezuela, in Terra Firma, situated on the E coast of the Lake of Maracaybo, 50 m. ESE of Maracaybo.

Part of Chatham Dock is in this parish. Here is a castle well furnished with guns, there being not less than 170 embrazures for cannon to stop the progress of an enemy, if they should happen to pass Sheerness, before they should reach Chatham. Here are also some copperas works. It is noted in history for being the place where 600 Norman gentlemen, who came over in the retinue of the princes Alfred and Edward, were barbarously murdered by Earl Godwin. Gillingham, All Saints and St. Mary's, Norf. lie near the bridge over the Wavenny to Beccles. Gillisland, Cumb. on the Picts' Wall, E of Carlisle, noted for the medicinal properties of its well. Gilmanby, Yorks. SW of Barnard Castle. Gilmore, Yorks. in the parish of Kirby Moorside. Gilmorton, Leicest. 3 m. from Lutterworth.

GILOLO, an island of Asia, with a town of the same name, in the Archipelago of the Moluccas, about 210 m. in length and 750 in circumference. It produces neither cloves nor nutmegs, though it is included in the Spice Islands, but is very fertile in rice and sago. The air is said to be very hot and unwholesome. The inhabitants are represented as fierce and cruel, living without laws or fixed habitations. It is seated under the line, in lat. 128 7 E.

Gilshauglin, Westm. 4 or 5 m. NW of Appleby. Gimmingham, Norf. near the sea-coast.

GIMONT, a town in the depart. of the Gers, 12 m. E of Auch.

Ginge, East and West, Berks, 3 m. from Wantage.

Ginge, Essex; see Margaretting.

GINGEE, a town on the coast of Coromandel, once the capital of a kingdom of the same name. It stands on a mountain whose top is divided into three points, on each of which is a castle. The Great Mogul besieged it 3 years, towards the close of the 17th century, to no purpose. It is 34 m. NW of Pondicherry. Lat. 12 16 N lon. 79 36 E.

GINGEN, an imperial town of Suabia, 16 m. N of Ulm.

Givandale, in the E. Riding of Yorks. 12 m. from York; also a hamlet in the parish of Rippon.

GIVET, a town, late of Namur, near Charlemont, in the depart. of the Ardennes, seated on the river Maese, by which it is divided into two parts, 21 m. SW of Namur, the fortifications of which are the work of Vauban. It was bombarded by General Coehorn, in the spring of 1696, when immense magazines of stores, forage, &c. provided by the French for the service of the ensuing campaign, were destroyed.

GIVIRA, a town of Milan.

GIULA, a town of Hungary, on the river Keres, 52 m. NNW of Temeswar.

GIULIA, NUOVA, a town in Abruzzo Ultra.

GIUSTENDIL, 2 towns of Bulgaria.

GLACIERS, a name given to some extensive fields of ice in Swisserland. The Glaciers may be divided into two sorts; the Lower, occupying the deep valleys situated in the bosom of the Alps, and termed by the natives Valley of Ice; and the Upper, which clothe the summits and sides of the mountains. The Lower Glaciers are the most considerable in extent and depth, some stretching several leagues in length. At the higher extremity they are bordered by inaccessible rocks, and on the other extend into cultivated valleys. The thickness of the ice varies from 80 to 100 feet, and in some parts extends to upwards of 600 feet. These immense fields of ice usually rest on an inclined plane; being pushed forward by the pressure of their own weight, and but weakly supported by the rugged rocks beneath, they are intersected by large transverse chasms, and present the appearance of walls, pyramids, and other fantastic shapes, observed at all heights, and at all situations, wherever the declivity exceeds 30 or 40 degrees. But in those parts where the plane on which they rest is horizontal, or only gently inclined, the surface of the ice is nearly uniform; the chasms are few and narrow, and the traveller crosses on foot without much difficulty. The surface of the ice is not so slippery as that of the frozen ponds or rivers; it is rough and granulated, and is only dangerous in deep descents. The following is a simple and natural theory relative to the formation of the Glaciers. An immense quantity of snow is continually accumulating in the elevated valleys, inclosed within the Alps, as well from that which falls from the clouds during nine months in the year, as from the masses which are incessantly rolling from the steep sides of the circumjacent mountains. Part of this snow, which is not dissolved during summer, impregnated with rain and snow-water, is frozen during winter, and forms that opaque and porous ice of which the Lower Glaciers are composed. The Upper Glaciers may be subdivided into those which cover the summits, and those which extend along the sides of the Alps. Those which cover the summits owe their origin to the snow that falls at all seasons of the year, and which remains nearly in its original state, being congealed into a hard substance, and not converted into ice; for in so cold a region there cannot be melted a quantity of snow sufficient to impregnate with water the whole mass which remains undissolved. The substance which clothes the sides of the Alps is neither pure snow, like that of the summits, nor ice, which forms the Lower Glaciers, but is an assemblage of both. It contains less snow than the summits, because the summer heat has more power to dissolve it, and because the liquefied snow descending from above, the mass is penetrated with a larger quantity of water. It contains more snow than the Lower Glaciers, because the dissolution of the snow is comparatively less. Hence the ice is even more porous, opaque, and less compact than the ice of the Lower Glaciers; and is of so doubtful a texture, as renders it in many parts difficult to decide whether it may be called ice or frozen snow. Thus there is a regular gradation from the snow on the summits, to the ice of the Lower Glaciers, formed by the intermediate mixture of snow and ice, which becomes more compact and less porous in proportion as it approaches the Lower Glaciers, until it unites and assimilates with them.

Gladmore, Herts, near Hadley. Gladsmuir, Haddingtons. on the S bank of the Frith of Forth, 10 m. from Edinburgh. Glaiston, Rutlands. near Bisbrook. Glaizdale, in the parish of Ayton, N. Riding of Yorks. Glamford, Norf. SW of Clay.

GLAMMIS, a small town 3 m. from Forfar; its ancient castle belongs to the earls of Strathmore. An obelisk here points out the place where Malcolm II. was murdered.

GLAMORGANSHIRE, a county of South Wales, bounded on the N by Carmarthens. and Brecknocks.; on the E by Monmouths.; and on the S and W by the Bristol Channel. It extends from E to W 48 m. and 26 from N to S. It is divided into 10 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 8 market-towns, 118 parishes, about 15,000 houses, and 81,268 inhab. On the N side of this county, where it is mountainous, the long continuance of the snow renders the air sharp; but the country being more level on the S side, it is there milder, more pleasant, more populous, and bears large crops of corn, with remarkably sweet grass; whence it has been called the garden of Wales. Cattle abound in all parts, there being fruitful valleys among the mountains that yield very good pasture. Here are also lead, coal, iron, and limestone. Its principal rivers are the Rumney, which separates it from Monmouths. the Teafe, Elwy, Neath, Ogmore, Avon, Cledaugh, and Tawy. Cardiff is the principal town, and Swansea the most commercial one; but the assizes for the county are held at Cowbridge.

Glanbehy, in Kerry, Munster.

Glandestrey, Radnors. 7 m. from Builth.

Glandore, in Cork, Munster. Glandore Harbour, 2 leag. W of the Galley Head, or Ross Bay, in Cork, Munster. This harbour is a remarkably good one, though small. Glanecragh, in Kerry, Munster. Glanevy, or Glenaxy, in Antrim, Ulster, 77 m. from Dublin. Glanflesk, in Kerry, Munster.

GLANDFORD BRIGG, a town of Lincolns. seated on a river, or navigable canal, called Ancholm; 23 m. N of Lincoln, and 156 N by W of London; with a large manufacture of skins, and a considerable trade in corn, coals, and timber. Market on Thurs.

Glandford, in the parish of Blakeney, Norf. 2½ m. from Holt.

Glangariff Bay, in Cork, Munster. Glangoura, in Cork, Munster. Glanmire, in Cork, Munster, on the river Glanmire, in a fertile tract of uneven country, about 3 m. from the city of Cork. Its environs exhibit a variety of extensive prospects richly diversified.

Glanmix, in the SW of Angus-sh.

Glanmore, in Kilkenny, Munster, 76 m. from Dublin. Glanorga, in Limerick, Munster.

Glanthis, SW, and Glanton, SE of Alnwick in Northumb. Glanton, in the parish of Whittingham, Northumb. 6 m. from Rothbury.

Glanton, in Cork, Munster, 135 m. from Dublin. Glanworth, in Cork, Munster. Glanyfrehane, in Cork, Munster.

Glaphow, Yorks. in Cleveland. Glapthorn, Northamp. 1½ m. from Oundle. Glapton, Notts. a hamlet of Clifton. Glapwell, Derbys. in the parish of Bolsover. Glaresdale Chapel, Yorks. SW of Whitby.

GLARIS, or GLARUS, one of the thirteen cantons in Swisserland, entirely surrounded by the Alps, except toward the N. It has the canton of Schweitz on the W and the Grisons on the E. It is a cold, mountainous country, yet affording cattle, cheese, butter, and a prodigious variety of uncommon plants, minerals, metals, crystals, medicinal springs, petrifactions, and large slates. The government is, or lately was, perfectly democratic; every person, at the age of sixteen, has a vote in the landsgemeind, or general assembly, which is held annually in the month of May, in an open plain, according to the custom of the ancient Gauls and Germans. This assembly ratifies new laws, lays contributions, enters into alliances, declares war, and makes peace. The executive power, however, is vested in a landrath, or council, composed of 48 Protestant members, and 15 Roman Catholics. The landamman, or chief of the republic, is chosen alternately from among the Protestants and Romanists, who live together here in great harmony, amicably fill together the chief offices of state, and successively make use of the same house for their assemblies for public worship. The population amounts to about 16 or 17,000 souls.

GLARIS, a large and populous town of Swisserland, capital of the canton of the same name, seated on the river Linth, 18 m. E of Schweitz. Lat. 46 56 N lon. 9 1 E.

Glasbury, Brecons. 4 m. from Hay. Glascoed, in the parish of Panteage, Monm. 4½ m. from Caerleon. Glascomb, Radnors. 4 m. from Kingston. Glascote, Warw. on the S side of the river Anker, opposite to Tamworth.

Glasehouse, Sussex, between Rudgwick and Plaistow Chapel. Glasen, Dorsets. near Yetminster.

GLASENDORF, a town of Niesse, in Silesia; and a town of Koniginstratz, in Bohemia.

GLASGOW, a city of Scotland, in the county of Lanark, 10 m. SW of Dumbarton, and 35 W of Edinburgh: from its extent, and the beauty and regularity of its buildings, it may justly be esteemed the second city in the kingdom. The streets are clean and well paved, and several of them, intersecting each other at right angles, produce a very agreeable effect. The four principal streets thus divide the city nearly into four equal parts; and the different views of them, from the cross, or centre of intersection, have an air of magnificence. Here are a few magnificent public buildings, and several charitable establishments, particularly the Merchants' Hospital, and that of the town. Here is a celebrated university; the single college belonging to which is an elegant and commodious building. The number of inhabited houses in it is 17,543, and it contains 100,749 inhab. In the year 1609 it contained only 8000 inhab. A considerable trade was formerly carried on here in tobacco and rum, but it has been lately on the decline. Their cotton manufactures rival those of Manchester in cheapness and elegance; and, before the late universal check to that branch of business in both kingdoms, it is said that cotton goods were manufactured in Glasgow and its vicinity, to the annual amount of 2,000,000*l.* sterling. A pottery is likewise carried on here, that emulates in beauty and elegance the Staffordshire ware. Printing-types are well executed here, and the glass manufactory has been very successful. Here are also manufactures of coarse earthen ware, hats, stockings, gloves, ropes, cordage, &c. It is also still noted for its incle-weavers. Glasgow has the advantage of two canals, besides the Great Canal that joins the Clyde to the Forth. Its proper river, the Clyde, has, at a great expense, been made navigable, within the last 30 years, for vessels drawing 7 feet 6 inches water. It is seated on the N bank of the above river, over which it has two stone bridges (one of them an elegant new one of 7 arches, 500 feet long and 32 wide; it was completed in 1772). Lat. 55 52 N lon. 4 2 W.

GLASGOW PORT, a town on the S side of the Clyde, erected in 1710, in order to serve as a sea-port of the city of Glasgow. It has an excellent harbour, with a grand pier; but still most of the ships that trade to the W. Indies sail from Greenock, and return to that port. The herring fisheries in the Frith of Clyde, form a considerable part of its trade. This port is situated 18 m. W by N of Glasgow, and 3 E of Greenock.

Glason, Cumb. in the parish of Boulness. Glason, or Glaston Castle, Lancas. SE of Dalton. Glass, Aberdeens. 3 m. from Huntly. Glassary, Argyles. 20 m. from Inverary. Glassbrook, in the parish of Warrington, Lancas. Glassenbury, Kent, in Cranbrook parish. Glasserton, Wigton, on the E coast of Luce Bay, 12 m. from Wigton. Glassford, Lanarks. 5 m. from Hamilton. Glasshoughton, W. Riding of Yorks. near Pontefract. Glassonbye, Cumb. near Kirk Oswald.

Glasslough, in Monaghan, Ulster. Glassnevin, in Dublin. It is an agreeable village, situated on a rising ground, 2 m. from the city of Dublin.

GLASTONBURY a pretty large, and well-built town of Somersets. principally consisting of two streets, in both of which are many houses, either entirely built, or patched up, with stones from its abbey, formerly the most magnificent in the world, the domains and revenue of which were immense. It was anciently called Avalonia, or the Isle of Avalon, into which no person whatever, not even a bishop or prince, was allowed to enter without leave from the abbot, to whom this power was granted by Canute the Dane. There were 61 abbots, who sat among the barons in parliament, and governed it successively for near 600 years. Richard Withing, the last, for refusing to surrender his abbey to Henry VIII. and acknowledge his supremacy, was condemned at Wells, and carried, with two of his monks, on a hurdle, to the Tor, or to St. Michael's Tower, a high hill in the neighbourhood, where he was hanged in his robes. His head was stuck up over the gate of his abbey, and his body, quartered, was exposed, in like manner, at Bath, Wells, Bridgewater, and Ilchester. Extensive ruins of this immense range of buildings are still remaining; but they have been much diminished for the sake of the stones, as every cottage hereabouts has part of a pillar, door, or window of this fabric: however, the curious structure, called the Abbot's Kitchen, is yet entire, and is of a very unusual contrivance, being built of stone, without any combustible material; as are also some fragments of the church and St. Joseph's chapel. The walls that remain are overgrown with ivy, and the aspect of the whole is, at once, melancholy and venerable. The principal manufacture here is stockings. Nearly adjoining, on a high, steep hill, is placed the tower of a church, the Tor abovementioned, which lifts its head into the clouds, and is an object of admiration to travellers, and even serves as a landmark to seamen in the Bristol Channel. It is situated in a low, marshy country, nearly encompassed with rivers, 6 m. SW of Wells, and 129 W by S of London. Market on Tues.

Glatendon, Northumb. in the barony of Wark. Glatting, Sussex, NW of Midhurst. Glatton, Hunts. $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. from Stilton.

GLATZ, a town of Silesia, formerly of Bohemia, containing about 400 houses within the walls, and as many in the four suburbs. It is capital of a mountainous but fertile principality of the same name, about 45 m. in length, and 95 in breadth, which was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the queen of Hungary. It has mines of coal, silver, and iron, good quarries, and plenty of cattle, with several mineral springs. The town of Glatz is a place of considerable trade, and is situated on the side of a mountain, and on the summit of which is a large and strong castle, near the river Neisse, 45 m. SW of Breslaw, and 82 E by N of Prague. Lat. 50 21 N lon. 16 40 E.

Glayston, Rutl. 2 m. from Uppingham. Glaysley, Shrops. in the parish of Bridgnorth. Gleaston, Lancas. near Dalton. Gledles, Derbys. in Scarsdale. Gledles, Yorks. SE of Sheffield. Gledthorp Grange, Notts. NW of Edwinstow. Glemsford, Suff. 3 m. from Clare. Glen, a river of Northumb. which runs through Glendale into the Till. Glen, Magna and Parva, 6 m. SE of Leicester.

Glenarm, in Antrim, Ulster, on the Bay of Glenarm, 105 m. from Dublin.

Glenbervie, Kincardines. 5 m. from Stonehaven. Glenbucket, on the banks of the Bucket, Aberdeens. 12 m. from Charleston. Glencairn, 12 m. from Dumfries. Glencross, Mid Lothian, 7 m. W of Edinburgh.

GLENCOE, THE VALE OF, in Argyles. noted for the military execution of its unsuspecting inhabitants, by a party of English soldiers, in 1691, in consequence of an order signed by king William, in council, for that purpose, and contrary to the faith of a royal proclamation. The male part of the inhabitants had many of them been in arms for the abdicated king James II.

Glencowen, a river of Cumb. which runs into the Ulles Water on the S.

GLENCROY, THE VALE OF, a wild and romantic valley in Argyles.

Glendale, Northumb. on the Glen.

Glendalagh, otherwise called the Seven Churches, a beautiful valley in Wicklow, Leinster, nearly surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and containing two lakes, and extensive ruins of the city of Glendalagh, which was formerly a bishopric, with an episcopal jurisdiction, extending to the walls of Dublin. It is 5 m. NW of Rathdrum.

Glendon, Northamp. 3 m. from Kettering. Glendovan, Perths. 6 m. from Kinross. Glendrove, a vale in Argyles. being one of the passes to the Highlands. Gleneleg, Inverness. on the road from Fort Augustus to the Isle of Skye. Glenfield, 3 m. NW of Leicester. Glenham, Great and Little, Suff. near Framlingham. Glenholm, Scotland, 12 m. from Peebles. Glenisla, Forfars. at the foot of the Grampian Hills. Glenluce, a village on a bay of the same name, in Wigtons.

Glenmire, a village near Cork, Ireland.

Glenmuick, Aberdeens. 12 m. from Castletown. Glenorchay, Argyles. 16 m. from Inverary.

Glenn Inn, in Donegal, Ulster. Glenny Bridge, in Down, Ulster.

GLENSHEE, SPITAL OF, a noted pass into the Grampian mountains, in Scotland, S of the point where the counties of Perth, Angus, and Aberdeen meet.

Glentham, Linc. W of Market Raisin. Glentham, Suff. 7 m. from Woodbridge.

Glentis, in Down, Ulster. Here is one of the most considerable fairs for black cattle in the N of Ireland.

Glentworth, Linc. SW of Glentham. Glewston, Heref. SW of Ross. Glimpton, Oxf. 3 m. N of Woodstock.

Glinsk, in Galway, Connaught.

Glinton, Northamp. near Peterborough. Glisset, All Saints, St. Michael, and Middle, Dorsets. near Cranbourn Chace.

Glinville, in Cork, Munster.

Glororum, in the parish of Bamborough, Northumb. 2½ m. from Belford. Glocester, Northumb. on the coast, in the parish of Warksworth. Glossop, Derbys. in the High Peak, 8 m. from Chapel le Frith.

GLOGAW, a fertile principality of Silesia, on both sides of the Oder, on the borders of Poland. It is divided into 6 circles. Great Glogaw (which contains 2 Catholic churches, 1 of which is collegiate, 3 convents, a Lutheran church and school, and a chapel for Calvinists) situated on the S side of the Oder, is the capital.

GLOGAW OBER, a town of Oppeln, in Silesia.

GLOMME, a river of Aggerhuys, in S. Norway, which passes by Elvedal, Koningsuinger, &c. and flows into the North Sea near Frederickstadt. From the outlet of Lake Miosa to Frederickstadt, its streams are intercepted by such frequent cataracts and shoals, as, in some places, to render it necessary to drag the trees, which are floated down, over the ground. About 30,000 trees are annually floated down this river to Frederickstadt.

GLOUCESTER, a large, clean, populous, and considerable city of Gloucesters. containing 5 parish churches, besides its ancient and magnificent cathedral, and 1500 houses. It is well built, and has been lately much improved; its four principal streets are greatly admired for the regularity of their junction in the centre of the town; besides which, there are several smaller ones, all well paved. Here is a good stone bridge over the Severn, the lowest down that river, with a quay, wharf, and custom-house. Gloucester has a flourishing manufacture of pins, and is seated on the E side of the Severn, where, by its two streams, it forms the Isle of Alney, 25 m. NE by N of Bristol, and 106 W by N of London. Market on Wedn. Fairs on April 5, July 5, Sept. 28, and Nov. 28, the latter chiefly for fat hogs.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W by Monmouths. and Heref.; on the N by Worcest.; and the E by Warw. and Oxf.; and on the S by Wilts, and Somersets. It extends from NE to SW more than 60 m. but is not more than 26 in breadth. It is divided into 13 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 27 market towns, 280 parishes, 1229 villages, 52,000 houses, and 285,514 inhab. The soil and appearance of this county vary in different parts, but the air is healthy throughout; sharp in the E or hilly part, which contains the Cotteswood Hills, but mild in the rich Vale of Severn, which occupies the centre. The W part, which is the smallest district, is varied by hill and dale, and chiefly occupied by the Forest of Dean, which was once full of oak trees; but the iron works have consumed a great part of them. The staple commodities are cheese, cyder, perry, bacon, grain, and fish, besides its manufactures of woollen cloths, hats, leather, paper, bar-iron, edge-tools, nails, brass, &c. Its rivers are the Severn the Warwickshire Avon, the Lower Avon, the Wye, Thames, Colne, Lech, Windrush, Evenlode, Churn, Leden, Swiliate, Caron, and Stour.

GLOUCESTER, a county in the state of Rhode Island; a town of New Jersey, situated on the Delaware; and a town of Virginia, situated on the N side of York River.

GLOUCESTER ISLAND, an inhabited island in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 8 m. long and 1 wide. The men appeared armed with long pikes or poles. Lat. 19 14 S lon. 140 4 W.

GLOUCESTER ISLANDS, two islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 6 leag. distant from each other. One of them is in lat. 20 38 S lon. 146 0 W. and the other in lat. 20 34 S and in lon. 146 15 W.

Glowston, Leicest. S of Hallaton. Glusburne, Yorks. S of Skipton, in the parish of Kildwick. Gluvians, St. Cornw. near Penryn, Glyford, Cornw. SE of Bodmin. Glyman, Cornw. near Columb Magna. Glynd, Sussex, 2 m. S of Lewes. Glyneburn, Sussex, near Lewes.

GLUCKSTADT, a strong town of Saxony.

Glynn, or Glin, in Limerick, Munster. Glyn of Agerlow, and Glyn Caum, in Cork, Munster. Glyn of the Downs, a romantic dale in the county of Wicklow, Leinster, so narrow as to admit of little more than the road which passes through it, and the small river which runs near the side of it. It is 13 m. from Dublin. Glyn Wood, in the parish of Donoghmore, in Down, Ulster.

Glyncorrwg, Glamorg. 5 m. from Neath. Glynrumney, Glamorg. near Cardiff.

Gnarmack, Cornw. NW of Truro.

GNESEN, or GNESNO, a town, late of Kalisch, in Poland, but now of West Prussia.

Gnosall, Staffords. upon Rowley Water, 7 m. from Stafford, and 8 from Penkridge, containing 150 houses.

GOA, a large and well-built city, on the W coast of Hindoostan, capital of the Portuguese settlements in India, and the seat of a viceroy. It contains about 20,000 inhab. of whom the native Portuguese amount to a very small number, and stands on an island of the same name, about 24 m. in circumference, separated from the continent by a fine river, called MANDOVA, capable of receiving ships of the greatest burden, which lie within a mile of the town. This noble port which is, by nature, one of the best in the Indies (and the Portuguese have spared no pains to heighten and improve its natural advantages), as well as the whole island, is defended by many castles and towers, furnished with abundance of cannon. Beyond these castles the channel becomes narrower, sometimes to 1, sometimes to 2 m.; and its banks are planted with the finest trees India affords. Eight m. up is the city of Goa. Half way up, on the right side, is a palace, formerly the seat of the viceroys, but it now serves as barracks for the garrison. The buildings are of stone, and splendid, with numerous convents, nunneries, and ecclesiastical houses. The viceroy's palace is a grand building, erected over one of the gates of the city, which leads to a spacious street, terminated by a beautiful church. Here is also a stately hospital; and in the shops about the market-place may be had the produce of Europe, China, Bengal, and other countries. In the houses they generally make use of clear oyster-shells, instead of glass, for windows. The air within the town is unwholesome, but the banks of the river are pleasant, and adorned with many handsome structures. From Old Goa to the new city, there is a commodious road, elegantly adorned with trees, for fruit and shade. The soil of the island is fertile, especially in the valleys; the trees are always covered with leaves, flowers, and fruit, and a great number of springs issue from the mountains. The tract between the town and the sea is thickly planted with villages and fine seats, and abounds with tropical trees and fruits. Though the houses here make a showy appearance, they are but poorly furnished. The inhabitants live chiefly on greens, fruit, roots, bread, rice, and fish, though they have hogs and fowl in plenty. Goa has few manufactures, or productions for commerce; their principal trade is in arrack, which they distil from the sap of the cocoa-nut tree. It has been in the hands of the Portuguese since the year 1510, when it was taken by general Albuquerque. Lat. 15 28 N lon. 73 45 E.

GOA, a town of the Island of Celebes, near the S coast, in lat. 5 12 S and lon. 120 30 E.

Goadby, Leicest. 6 m. NE of Market Harborough. Goadby Marwood, Leicest. N of Waltham-on-the-Would. Goatland, in the parish of Pickering, Yorks.

Gobblecote, Herts, near Tring.

GOBIN, ST. See FERE.

Gobions, Magna, Essex, in the liberty of Havering.

GOCH, a town of Cleves.

GOCIANO, a town and district of Sardinia.

GODALMING, a town of Surry, 4 m. SW of Guildford, and 34 SW of London, on the road to Portsmouth, noted for licorice, excellent carrots, and peat that burns as well as pit-coal. Here is a manufactory of stockings; as also of mixed kerseys, and blue ones, that are not to be matched for colour. The country about it is agreeably diversified with hills and gentle uplands. It is seated on several streams of the river Wey, (which abounds with good fish, especially pike, and which drives one grist-mill, two paper-mills, and three corn-mills,) and contains 3543 inhab. Market on Wedn.

GODAVERY, GUNGA, or GODOURY, a river of Hindoostan, which rises about 70 m. NE of Bombay, and after crossing Dowlatabad, and part of Golconda, falls into the bay of Bengal by several mouths, in lat. about 16 40 N and lon. 82 20 E.

Goddington, Kent, in Frendsbury parish. Goddington, Oxf. 4 m. NE of Bicester. Godley, Chesh. SE of Druckenfield. Godlingstone, Dorsets. in Purbeck Isle, and Swanwich parish.

GODMANCHESTER, a town or large village of Hunts. parted from the town of Huntingdon by the river Ouse, but united to it by a bridge and short causeway, which form a part of the post road between London and Edinburgh. The church is a venerable Gothic building. It is inhabited by a great number of yeomen and farmers, who are said to have extraordinary teams of horses, no town in England keeping more ploughs at work than this hath done. They formerly received the kings, who passed that way, with a display of their instruments of agriculture, exhibiting, at one time, to James I. when he passed through it, nine score ploughs, adorned with trappings, &c.

Godmanham, Yorks. between Beverley and Pocklington. Godmanston, Dorsets. 4 m. from Dorchester. Godmersham, Kent, on the river that runs from Wye to Canterbury. Godneston, Kent, a manor of Sittingbourn. Godolphin, Cornw. situated on a hill, E of Mount's Bay, 4 m. from Market Jew, famous for its tin mines.

Godshill, Isle of Wight, 5 m. from Newport.

Godstone, Surry, E of Blechingley, 19 m. from London.

Godstow, NW of Oxford, in the parish of Wolvercot, in a sort of island, formed by the divided streams of the Isis, after being joined by the Evenlode. This place is noted for the catching and dressing of fish. Here are an arched gateway, and the venerable ruins of the nunnery, with its conventual church, which Fair Rosamond quitted for the embraces of Henry II. Godwick, Notts. W of Elmham. Gofford Green, Warw. E of Coventry. Goforth, Cumb. near Ponsonby.

GOES, or TER GOES, a town in Zealand, capital of the Island of S. Beveland. It communicates with an arm of the Scheldt, by a canal, and carries on a considerable trade in salt, grain, &c. It is 10 m. NE of Flushing.

Gogmagog Hills, 3 m. from Cambridge, near Newmarket and Balsham.

GOGRA, DEWAH, or SOOR JEW, a large river which rises in Thibet, and forcing its way through Mount Himmaleh, crosses the country of Oude, and unites with the Ganges, about 15 m. W of Patna.

GOHUD, a circar, or territory of Hindostan, in the province of Agra, subject to a rajah, who is tributary to the Poonah Mahrattas. Its capital is 55 m. SSE of Agra.

Goit, a river of Chesh. which runs into the Mersey, 3 m. E of Stopford. Goit Hall, Chesh. NE of Stockport. Goitre, Monmouths. 4½ m. from Usk.

GOITO, a town of Mantua.

GOJAM, a flat country of Abyssinia, about 25 leag long and 14 wide. It is almost surrounded by the river Nile, and abounds in pastures.

Gokewell, Linc. NW of Glandford Bridge. Goland, Cornw. near Fowey. Golborn, Chesh. SW of Tattenhall. Golborn, Lancas. near W. Derby, in the parish of Winwick. Golcar, in the parish of Huddersfield, Yorks.

GOLCONDA, a country of Hindostan, bounded on the N by Berar, on the E by the 5 Circars, on the S by Mysore and the Carnatic, and on the W by Dowlatabad and Visiapour, subject to the Nizam of the Deccan. The great rains which fall in June, part of July, August, September, and October, swell the rivers here to a dangerous degree of depth and rapidity, but render the land exceedingly fertile, especially in fruits. The inhabitants make white wine of their grapes, and have yearly two crops of rice and other grain. The diamond mines here are reckoned the most considerable in the world. The black merchants usually buy parcels of ground to search for these precious stones in. They sometimes fail in meeting with any; and at others they find immense riches. They have also mines of salt and fine iron; and manufactures of curious calicoes and chintzes. Hydrabad is the capital, but the city and fortress of Golconda was formerly the residence of the kings of this country.

GOLDBERG, a town of Lignitz, in Silesia.

Goldbroke, Suff. near Eye. Goldcliff, Monmouths. 4 m. from Newport.

GOLD COAST OF GUINEA, a maritime country of Africa, in which are more forts and factories of European nations than in any other part of the coast of Africa. It reaches from the river Suera da Costa on the W to the river Volta on the E, and includes several districts, in which are two or three towns or villages, scattered along the sea-shore. The whole Gold Coast is about 180 m. in length. The negro merchants here are generally very rich, and trade with Europeans in gold. The domestic animals are bulls, cows, sheep, and goats; the last of which are innumerable, and their flesh is excellent. The beef and mutton, however, are not good. The principal countries are Ancobar, Axem, Anta, Commenda, Fetu, Sabo, Adom, Agouna, Acra, Acambore, Labadde, Fantin, Incassan, Ningo, and Sabre.

GOMBROON, or GAMBRON, a sea-port of Laristan, in Persia, called also Bandar Abassi, seated on a bay, 9 m. distant from the island of Ormus. The best houses here are built with bricks dried in the sun, and are flat at the top, with a square turret, having holes on each side for a free passage of air. Those who stay in town during the summer, sleep upon these roofs. Other houses, or rather huts, are made with the boughs of palm-trees, and covered with leaves. The soil around it is barren, but provisions, brought from other countries, are plentiful. Through all the 17th century, and at the beginning of the last, this town was the port of Schiras, and of all the S part of Persia. At present, however, trade is very low here, nor is there a single European counting-house in the city. The Dutch for a while continued to trade here, but since they formed a settlement in the Island of Kaiek, they have entirely deserted Gombroon. Lat. 27 20 N lon. 57 0 E.

GOMERA, one of the Canary Islands, about 20 m. long, and 10 wide, lying between Ferro and Teneriffe, about 6 leag. SW from the latter. It is well cultivated, and fertile, producing abundance of sugar-canes, fruits, and wine, with corn enough to supply the wants of the inhabitants. Its capital, of the same name, is situated on the E coast, and has an excellent harbour, better than in any of the other islands, where the Spanish West India fleets often stop to take in provisions and refreshments. Lat. 28 6 N lon. 17 8 W.

GOMERA, a river of Fez, which runs into the Straits of Gibraltar, near the town Velez de Pegnon.

GOMS, a town of Switzerland, which gives name to a territory in the Valais. It is about 33 m. E of Sion.

GONAIVES, LES, a sea-port town of the Island of St. Domingo, situated near a medicinal spring, with an excellent harbour, in lat. 19 36 N and lon. 73 40 W.

Gonalston, Notts. SE of Sherwood Forest.

GONAPI, or GOUNONG API, one of the small Banda Islands, in the Eastern Indian Ocean. Its only inhabitants are wild hogs, cows, and serpents. In the middle of it is a volcano.

GONDAR, a town of Africa, the metropolis of Abyssinia, situated on a hill of considerable height, and containing about 10,000 families in time of peace. The houses are chiefly of clay, and the roofs thatched in the form of cones, the usual construction within the tropical rains. On the W end of the town is the palace, or king's house, which, with its contiguous buildings, is surrounded by a substantial stone wall, 30 feet high, with battlements and a parapet, by which you can go along the whole. The inhabitants are of an olive complexion, and profess Christianity. Their patriarch depends upon that of Alexandria; but they appear as jealous of the European Christians as of the Mussulmans. They have no shops, but expose their merchandise to sale upon mats, in a large square; gold and rock-salt form their medium of barter. The habit of the better sort is made of silks and cottons, but the common people wear nothing but drawers. It is 180 m. SE of Sennar, and near 1000 S of Grand Cairo. Lat. 12 34 N lon. 37 33 E.

GONDEGAMA, or GONDLACOMMA, a river of Hindostan, which, rising near Combam, forms the nominal boundary of the Carnatic on the N, and enters the Bay of Bengal at Medipilly, or Mootapilly.

Goodale House, Yorks. in Holderness, W of Hornsey Mere. Gooderston, Norfolk, between Downham and Watton.

GOOD HOPE, CAPE OF, the most southerly point of the continent of Africa, and very rocky, lies in 34 29 S lat. and 18 23 E lon. Upwards of 30 m. to the N of it is the Cape Town, which is neat and well built, rising in the midst of a desert, encompassed by black and dreary mountains. The public offices of the E. India company are situated next the water, and the private buildings lie beyond them on a gentle ascent. The streets are broad and regular, intersecting each other at right angles, and the houses are mostly built of stone, cemented together with a glutinous kind of earth, which serves as mortar, and afterwards is neatly plastered and white-washed with lime. The religion of the slaves is as little regarded here as in the colonies of other European states. They are treated, however, with humanity, and are lodged and boarded in a spacious house, where they are kept at work. The slaves, a few Hottentots excepted, were originally brought from the E. Indies, and principally from Malacca. Another great building serves as an hospital for the sailors belonging to the Dutch E. India ships which touch here. It is situated close to the company's garden, and is an honour and ornament to the town; the convalescents have free access to these gardens, where they enjoy the benefit of a pure, wholesome air, perfumed by the fragrance of a great number of rich fruit-trees, aromatic shrubs, and odoriferous plants and flowers; they have likewise the use of every production in it. This garden, for its handsome, pleasant, well-shaded walks, is much frequented by persons of every description, but particularly by the fashionable and gay. The inhabitants, indeed, in general, are extremely fond of gardens, which they keep in excellent order. The heavy draught work about the Cape is chiefly performed by oxen, which are brought to an uncommon degree of docility and usefulness. The inhabitants, in general, travel in a kind of covered waggon, drawn by oxen, which better suit the roughness of the country, than more elegant vehicles; but the governor, and some of the wealthier people, keep coaches, which are much in the English style, and are drawn by six horses. There are two churches here, one large, plain, and unadorned, for the Calvinists, the prevailing sect; and a smaller one for the Lutherans. The lower parts of the houses here are uncommonly neat and clean, both in appearance and reality, but the upper apartments are said to be barely and badly furnished. The streets seem much on a par with the latter, being rough, uneven, and unpaved. Many of the houses, however, have a space flagged before the door, and others have trees planted before them, which form a pleasant shade, and give an air of novelty to the streets. The only landing place is at the E end of the town, where there is a wooden quay, which runs some paces into the sea, with several cranes on it, for the convenience of loading and unloading the scoots that come alongside. Close to this quay, on the left hand, stands the castle, and principal fortress; a strong, extensive work, having excellent accommodations for the troops, and for many of the civil officers belonging to the colony. Within the gates, the Dutch East-India company lately had their principal stores; which were spacious as well as convenient. This fort covers and defends the E part of the town and harbour, as Amsterdam fort does the W part. The latter, which has been built since commodore Johnstone's expedition, and wherein both French and Dutch judgment have been united, to render it effectual and strong, is admirably planned, and calculated to annoy and harass ships coming into the bay. Some smaller detached fortifications extend along the coast, both to the E and W, and make landing, which was not the case before the American war, hazardous and difficult. In a word, Cape Town is, at this time, fortified with strength, regularity, and judgment. The ground behind the town gradually rises on all sides towards the mountains, called the Table Mountain, which is the highest; the Sugar Loaf, so named from its form; the Lion's Head; Charles Mount; and James Mount, or the Lion's Rump. The view from the Table Mountain is extensive and picturesque; and all along the valleys are scattered a number of fine plantations. The cultivated country, beyond the mountains is of great extent, and forms six different establishments. The soil is uncommonly productive, and the climate benign and favourable to vegetation. The spring commences here in October. Provisions are very reasonable at the Cape. In September, 1795, the town and colony surrendered to an English squadron, under sir G. K. Elphinstone, seconded by about 8000 land forces, under majors-general Clarke and Craig, on terms of capitulation. The loss of the English amounted to only 4 men killed, and a few officers and men wounded.

The bank on the right is steep, and covered with wood, beyond which a bold promontory shoots out, crowned with a castle rising among trees. Goodrington, Devons. in Paynton parish.

GOODWIN SANDS, noted sand banks off the coast of Kent, lying eastward of the Downs, and about 4 or 5 m. from the S. Foreland. As they run parallel with the coast for 3 leag. together, at the distance of 4 or 5 m. from it, they add much to the security of the Downs as a road, as they break off the force of the sea on the E and S and SW, but when the wind blows hard at SE, or at E by N, or ENE, ships are often driven from their anchors, and are either forced on these sands, or obliged to take shelter in Sandwich Bay or Ramsgate Pier. These sands occupy the space that was formerly a large tract of low, marshy ground, belonging to Godwin, earl of Kent, father of king Harold, and was afterwards given to the St. Augustin monastery, at Canterbury; but the abbot, neglecting to keep in repair the wall that defended it from the sea, the whole tract was inundated. Great part of it is dry at low water.

GRANADA, or GRENADA, an island in the West Indies, about 24 m. in length from N to S and 12 wide in the centre, but gradually narrowing towards the extremities. A chain of mountains crosses it from N to S, in the centre of which is a large lake. Near the coast the soil is fertile, producing indigo, sugar, coffee, cocoa, cotton, and tobacco. It is finely wooded, and trees of all sorts, both fruit and timber, except the cocoa-tree, thrive better here than those of the same species in the neighbouring islands. It is watered with nineteen rivers, three of which run into the sea towards the E, three to the N, eight to the W, and five to the SE, all sufficient to drive sugar-mills, and capable of becoming harbours for vessels. There is also abundance of game and river-fish. In 1787, the exports of this island were 175,584 cwt. of sugar, 670,000 gallons of rum, 8800 cwt. of coffee, 2700 cwt. of cocoa, 2,000,000 lbs. of cotton, and 2800 lbs. of indigo, besides miscellaneous articles, amounting in the whole to upwards of 600,000*l.* sterling, at the London prices. It is one of the Windward Caribbees, and is 30 leagues NW of Tobago. The principal harbours are Port Lewis, a very spacious one, on the W side of the island, and St. George. The capital is called St. George, containing about 1200 white inhab. It was taken by the French in 1779, and restored to the English in 1783. Lat. about 12 10 N lon. 61 30 W.

GRAVESEND, a town of Kent, consisting chiefly of one paved and lighted street, situated on the Thames directly opposite to Tilbury Fort, 9 m. WNW of Rochester, and 22 S by E of London. It is a place of considerable resort being a common landing place for seamen and strangers in their passage to London, and the first port in the Thames. It is commonly called the corporation of Gravesend and Milton, these two places having been incorporated by Queen Elizabeth. In the reign of Richard II. the French and Spaniards came up the Thames, burnt and plundered it, and carried away most of the people; and, by way of compensation for this loss, he granted the remaining inhabitants the exclusive privilege of carrying passengers, between this place and London, in large and commodious boats, at twopence a head, or a whole boat's fare at four shillings. They still enjoy this privilege; but the fare is now 18*d*, and the boats are much improved: they depart from Billingsgate every high water, and from Gravesend every flood. For its better security, Henry VIII. raised a blockhouse, with a platform of guns to the E of the town. The gardens round the town are so rich, that they not only supply the shipping, and all the towns for several miles round, with every article of that kind, but great quantities, and particularly of asparagus, remarkably fine, are sent to London. Here is a small theatre. The chief employment of the labouring people is the spinning of hemp, to make nets for fishing, and ropes. Markets on Wedn. and Sat. and a fish-market on Sunday morning.

GREENLAND, a country, including some islands, situated between the Straits of Davis and Frobisher, and Iceland. The northern limits are as yet unknown. W. Greenland seems to be the most N-easterly part of America. E. Greenland lies in a high latitude, N of the continent of Europe, as does also Spitzbergen, which is sometimes comprehended under the general name of Greenland. The seas on the coast are annually visited by a great number of ships of the English and other European nations, for the purpose of fishing for whales. The most southerly point of land in W. Greenland, is Cape Farewell, at the entrance of Davis' Straits, in lat. 59 38 N and in lon. 42 45 W. The Greenlanders are strangers to trade, arts, and sciences. They are generally short, or under the common size, but well proportioned, fat, and plump. Their clothing is made of the skins of the rein deer, the dog-fish, and of certain birds, sewed together with the small guts of the canis marinus. It is very seldom that they are afflicted with epidemical diseases, but the scurvy is the reigning distemper in this country; their common remedy on this occasion, besides other simples, is scurvy-grass. Both sexes live together in a very sordid, filthy manner, in two sorts of habitations, one of which serves for the winter, and the other for the summer season. The winter dwellings are large huts, seldom more than two ells above the surface of the ground; the roof is covered with turf, and the entrance is dug narrow and winding under ground. These wintry mansions, are extremely warm, but stink intolerably, from the number of persons generally confined in them. Their summer habitations are light tents, made of the smooth skins of the dog-fish. The occupation of the men is chiefly fishing and hunting, for which they have very curious tackle and instruments. The boats in which the men only row out to sea, are made of very thin, narrow boards, fastened together with whalebone, and covered with seal-skins. Only one man goes out in one of these boats, who is half covered, and so securely laced in, that the water cannot penetrate into the boat; thus equipped he will row 60 or 70 m. in a day, though he has but one oar, which is 6 or 7 feet long, and flat at both ends. Their chief commodities are blubber and whalebone, the horn of the sea-unicorn, and the skins of deer, foxes, and the dog-fish. They neither use, nor have any knowledge of money, but they fix a certain value on iron. The original inhabitants, on the first arrival of the Norwegians, in 1023, were savages, apparently of American extraction. Since the middle of the last century, Danes have settled several colonies along coast, and at present claim the sovereignty the country. There is a company established at Copenhagen, which sends 3 or 4 every year to Greenland. The animals r, bears, foxes, wild fowls; and in the hales and seals.

ngs to England, being taken in 1810. It tains 110,000 inhab. It is about 250 m. in circumference, and is divided into two parts by a channel, in one place 4 m. over, and navigable only for canoes, called Rivière Sale. By this strait, the sea on the NW communicates with that on the SE. The NW part is divided into Basseterre and Cabesterre. The SE part is named Grandeterre; it does not, however, contain more land than the former, but its shape is more irregular. The soil is exceedingly good, and every where well watered, especially in the district of Cabesterre. On the top of a very lofty mountain is a volcano, called La Souffriere, the two mouths of which open into a pit of sulphur. The negroes get brimstone here, which they afterwards purify and sell. The vegetables, fruits, and trees, are much the same as in the other islands, except the cinnamon-tree, balsam of the capivi, and the milk shrub, which yields a balsamic liquor like milk. The bees here are without stings; their honey never hardens, but is always of the consistence of oil. In 1775, the exports were 188,386 quintals of sugar, 63,029 of coffee, 1438 of indigo, 1024 of cocoa, and 5193 of cotton; besides hides, and other articles, and without including the barter with Martinique and other islands. GUERNSEY, an island in the English Channel, near the coast of France, about 30 m. in circumference, 20 m. NE of Jersey, and contains about 15,000 inhab. It has been held subject to England, since the time of the Norman conquest. The natives speak French, this island having been formerly a part of Normandy, and being still governed by the old Norman laws. The air is healthy, and the soil more rich and fertile than that of Jersey. Here is a very good harbour, and, on the S side of the island, a bay capable of receiving large vessels. They are sufficiently supplied with corn and cattle for their own use, and that of the ships; wines and cider are cheap and plentiful; there is plenty of game and fowl; and they catch great quantities of sea-fish of various kinds. The inhabitants have a considerable trade to Newfoundland and the Mediterranean. Guernsey is divided into 10 parishes, but with only 8 churches; and is governed by a governor, a bailiff, and 12 jurats appointed by the king of Great Britain; the governor receives tythes of all kinds of grain. The staple manufacture is knit stockings. Port St. Pierre is the principal town, consisting of one long street, in which are many good buildings. Lat. 49 30 N lon. 2 56 W.

GUIANA, an extensive country of S. America, on the coast of the Atlantic, lying between the rivers Oronoko and Oreilana. It is about 1100 m. in length, and from 300 to 600 in breadth. The French possessed one part of the coast, and the Dutch another; but Dutch Guiana contains the settlements of Surinam, Berbice, Issequibo, and Demerary, all which take their names from different rivers; but now belongs to Great Britain. French Guiana goes by the name of Equinoctial France, or Cayenne, from the territory so called, and extends from the river Marawina to the river Oyapoco SE. Spanish Guiana, is that part called, in some maps, New Cumana, or New Andalusia, bounded on the SE by the French and Dutch possessions. The town of San Toma stands on the S bank of the Oronoko. The internal parts of the country are but little known; they are inhabited, however, by different tribes of Indians, some of whom make their houses on trees, to be secure from the inundations of the rivers. Sugar, cotton, silk, tobacco, Brazil wood, aloes, natural balsam, oranges, and citrons made into sweetmeats, or otherwise, are articles of commerce in this country. It lies between 2 and 8 deg. of N lat.

GUIENNE, a ci-devant province of France, very fruitful, and producing great quantities of wine. It was about 160 m. in length, and 85 in breadth, having Bourdeaux for its capital. The word Guienne is a corruption of Aquitaine, an ancient country, of great extent, said by Cæsar to be separated from the rest of Gaul by the river Garonne.

GUINEA, a country of Africa, of which little is known, except the coast, thence called the Coast of Guinea. It is divided into the Lower and the Upper. The Lower part is commonly called Congo. The Upper comprehends the districts of Sierra Leone; the Grain Coast, or Malagueta; the Tooth Coast; the Gold Coast; the Slave Coast; and Benin. It is unhealthy for Europeans, though the natives live to a considerable age. The latter in general go almost naked, and are said to be an innocent, inoffensive, and hospitable people, except such as have been corrupted by the Europeans. These have factories on the coast, and promote feuds, frauds, and civil wars among the natives, by every means of seduction, kidnapping, and coercion, that they may get the prisoners to carry off as slaves. Two or three European settlements are at length formed in Guinea, under the governments of Great Britain and Denmark, for the purpose of carrying on an honest and advantageous trade with the natives, and for promoting their civilisation. The productions of this country are the variety of rich tropical fruits, gums, hard woods, grain, gold, ivory, wax, &c.

GUINEA, NEW, a long, narrow island of the S. Pacific Ocean, N of New Holland, from which it is separated by Endeavour Strait. This strait is about 10 leag. long, and 5 broad, except at the NE entrance, where it is contracted by a group of islands, called the Prince of Wales's Islands. New Guinea extends from near the equator to 12 deg. S lat. and from 131 to 153 deg. E lon. The land is in general low, and covered with an astonishing luxuriance of wood and herbage. Most of the trees, shrubs, and plants, that are common in the S. Sea Islands, are found here in the greatest perfection. The inhabitants resemble the New Hollanders.

HANS TOWNS, or HANSEATIC UNION, a name given to a confederacy of several sea-ports of Europe, which formed, at the time, the principal part of the commerce of Europe. This association extended from the North Seas and the Baltic, along the whole coast of Europe to Messina in the Mediterranean, and included in it, cities of Poland, Norway, Germany, Holland, England, France, Spain, Portugal, and the different states of Italy. The design of this association was, at first, their common defence against the pirates, who were numerous in the North Seas and the Baltic; for a time they were much encouraged by the different governments of Europe, and had considerable privileges granted them. In the year 1200, there were seventy-two cities in the list of Hans Towns; and so powerful was this alliance, that their ships were often hired by different princes to assist them against their enemies; at length they grew so formidable, particularly from the 14th to the 16th century, as to give umbrage to several princes, who commanded all the different cities within their jurisdiction to withdraw from the union. This immediately separated the cities of England, France, Spain, and Italy, from the Hans. These, on the other hand, excluded several others, and put themselves under the protection of the empire, making a decree that none should be admitted into their society, but such cities as stood within the limits of the German Empire. For a while the confederacy was thus continued where it had first begun, but was at length reduced to Bremen, Lubeck, Hamburg, and Dantzic, each of which cities now carries on a separate trade for itself, but during the revolution under the control of France.

It is not very large, but is well inhabited and frequented, and here the packet-boats are stationed, that sail to Helvoetsluys weekly during peace. It is also the station of the packet-boats to Gottenburg. It has a very safe, spacious, and convenient harbour, extending from the sea to within 2 m. of Ipswich, and able to receive ships of 100 guns all the way; here is also a very good dock-yard for building ships, with the necessary storehouses, cranes, launches, &c. The washing and undermining of the tides, and the falling off of large pieces of cliff, have made the point a peninsula, and, perhaps, may in time make it an island. The harbour is defended by Languard Fort, built on a sandy point on the Suff. side of the water, and other strong works. It is a place of considerable trade, and many vessels are employed in the North Sea fishery. Markets on Tues. and Frid.

HATVANY, a town of Hungary, 20 m. NE of Buda.

HAVANNAH, a sea-port town of the Island of Cuba, situated on the NW part of it, opposite Florida. The harbour is capable of containing commodiously 1000 vessels, without either cable or anchor. The entrance to it is by a narrow channel, strongly fortified with platforms, works, and artillery, for at least half a mile, the length of the passage. On the E side of the mouth of the channel is the famous Moro Fort, mounted with 40 pieces of cannon, almost level with the water: and on the opposite side a strong fort, called the Puntal, adjoining to the town. All the ships that come from the Spanish American settlements, rendezvous here on their return to Spain. In 1700, the town was computed to contain 26,000 inhab., Spaniards, mulattoes, and negroes; a number which must have been considerably increased since. The houses are elegant, built of stone, and some of them superbly finished; and the churches and other public buildings are rich and magnificent. Provisions here are extravagantly dear; neither is their fresh meat of the best kinds, excepting their pork. This inconvenience is not owing to any defect in the soil of the island, but to the indolence of the Spaniards. In 1762, the Havannah was taken by an English squadron and army, under sir G. Pocock and lord Albemarle. The Moro Fort was taken by storm, after a siege of 29 days. Twelve men of war and 3 frigates were taken at the same time with the town. It was restored, however, by the peace of 1763. Lat. 23 12 N lon. 82 13 W.

HAVANT, a market town of Hants, 6 m. from Portsmouth, and 66 from London, on the borders of Sussex. Market on Sat.

HAVERFORDWEST, a very ancient town of Pembrokes. containing 4 parish churches, 630 houses, and 3090 inhab. seated on a creek of Milford Haven, called the Dongledye, over which it has a stone bridge, 15 m. S by E of St. David's, and 289 W by N of London. It is a large, well-built, handsome place, inhabited by many genteel families; and has a considerable trade, with several vessels belonging to it. Here is also a commodious quay for ships of burthen, and a custom-house. Here the assizes are held, and the county-jail is kept. Markets on Tues. and Sat.

Havergate, Norf. W of Yarmouth.

HAVERHILL, a town of Massachusetts, 27 m. N of Boston.

Haverholm, Linc. NE of Sleaford. Haverick, Northumb. near Millum Castle.

HAVERILL, a town of Suffolk, partly in Essex. It has a considerable manufacture of checks, cottons, and fustians, and is 59 m. NNE of London, and 4 from Clare. Market on Wedn.

Havering at Bower, Essex, near Rumford. It is a most charming spot, having an extensive and beautiful prospect over a great part of Essex, Hertfords. Kent, Middlesex, and Surry, and also a fine view of the Thames, with the ships sailing up and down. Some parts of the walls of a palace, that seems to have been always the house of a queen consort and her jointure, are still standing here. Haversham, Bucks, near Newport Pagnel. Haverstock Hill, Midd. between London and Hampstead.

HAVERSTRAW, a town of New York, 32 m. N of that city.

HEBRIDES, or WESTERN ISLANDS OF SCOTLAND. These islands lie between the 55th and 59th deg. of N lat. on the W coast of Scotland, and are supposed to be about 300 in number. The principal of them are Skye, St. Kilda, Lewis, and Harris, N. and S. Uist, Cannay, Staffa, Mull, Jura, Isla, &c.—which see respectively.

HEBRIDES, NEW, a group of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, situated between the latitudes of 14 29 and 20 4 S, and between the longitudes of 166 41 and 170 21 E. The principal islands are Tierra del Espirito Santo and Malicollo, besides several others of less note, some of which are from 18 to 25 leagues in circumference. In general they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood and water, and the usual productions of the tropical islands. The bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, and plantains, are neither so good nor so plentiful here as at Otaheite; but the sugar-canes and yams are not only in great plenty, but of superior quality, and much larger, some of the latter weighing 56 pounds. The inhabitants are generally of a slender make and dark colour, and most of them have frizzled hair. Their canoes and houses are but small, and poorly constructed; and they have scarcely any manufacture, even for cloathing. They generally appear civil and hospitable.

HEBRON, a town of Palestine, where the Christians had a church, built by Constantine, the walls of which are yet in existence. It is situated near the fertile Valley of Mamre, partly on a hill, and partly on a plain, 24 m. SW of Jerusalem.

Heckdyke, a river in Nottinghams. which runs into the Trent, a little above Stokerith. Heckfield, Hants, NW of Hartley Row. Heck, Great and Little, Yorks. W. Riding, near Snaith. Heckingham, Norf. NE of Loddon. Heckington, Kent, near Canterbury. Heckington, Linc. in the Fens. This village is a compact place, with several good houses. It has been inclosed but a few years, having been, before that period, generally under water, but it now produces immense crops of oats. Heckmondwyck, Yorks. in Burstall parish.

HECLA, a burning mountain in Iceland, which frequently sends forth flames, and torrents of burning matter. It takes up 4 hours time to ascend.

HEDEMORA, a well-built, commercial town of Dalecarlia, in Sweden, with a large manufacture of gunpowder. It is situated near a lake, 53 m. NW of Upsal.

Hedcorn, Kent, NW of Smarden. Heddenham, Norfolk, NW of Bungay. Heddingley, Notts. NW of Southwell. Heddington, near Oxford. Heddington, Wilts, between Marlborough and Bath. It seems to have been anciently a Roman colony, from the foundations of houses that have been dug up here, for a mile together, and silver and copper coins of the emperors found here. Heddon, East and West, Northumb. E of Harlow. Heden, Kent, near Wingham. Hedgesset, Suff. SE of Rushbrook. Hedgeley, Bucks, between Uxbridge and Beaconsfield.

HELDRUNGEN, a town of Germany, 20 m. N of Weimar.

HELENA, ST. an island in the S. Atlantic Ocean, held by the English East-India Company. Its circumference is about 20 miles, and it has the appearance at a distance of a rock or castle, rising out of the ocean, being only accessible at one particular spot, where the town is erected, in a valley, at the bottom of a bay, between two steep, dreary mountains. The buildings, both public and private, are plain, but neat. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana's Peak, which is covered with woods to the very top. There are other hills also, which bear evident marks of a volcanic origin; and some have huge rocks of lava, and a kind of half vitrified flags. The country, however, is far from being barren: the little hills are covered with rich verdure, and interspersed with fertile valleys, which contain gardens, orchards, and various plantations. The valleys are watered by rivulets, and the mountains, in the centre of the island, are covered with wood. The soil which covers the rocks and mountains is, in general, a rich mould, from six to ten inches deep, clothed with a variety of plants and shrubs. The walks of peach-trees are loaded with fruit, which have a peculiarly rich flavour; but the other European fruit trees and vines, which have been planted here, do not succeed. Cabbages, and other greens, thrive extremely well, but are devoured by the caterpillars; as are the barley, and other kinds of grain, by the rats, which are very numerous. The ground, for these reasons, is laid out chiefly in pastures, the verdure of which is surprising; and the island can support 3000 head of their small cattle. They have English sheep here, and a small breed of horses, with goats and rabbits. Their fowls are ring pheasants, red-legged partridges, rice-birds, pigeons, &c. of some of which the breed is indigenous, but others have been brought from Europe, Africa, and the E. Indies. The number of inhabitants on the island does not exceed 2000, including near 500 soldiers, and about 600 slaves, who are supplied with all sorts of manufactures by the company's ships, in return for refreshments; and many of the slaves are employed in catching fish, which are very plentiful. This island is situated between the continents of Africa and S. America, about 1200 m. W of the former, and 1800 E of the latter. Lat. 15 55 S lon. 5 49 W.

HELEN'S, ST. a town in E. Medina, in the Isle of Wight, with a large bay, which runs a considerable way within the land, capable of holding the largest fleets.

HELEN'S, ST. one of the Scilly Isles, noted as having the remains of one of the oldest Christian churches in the British dominions.

The river rises in Wendron parish, and runs about 3 miles to the village of Guyk, whither the barks come up with the tide. About 3 miles below it falls into the sea, forming a haven, which, within a mile of its mouth, is deep enough for ships of 200 tons to ride in safety, and is about a mile wide at its passage into the sea. Helgey, Norf. near Downham.

HELICON, MOUNT, a hill in the ancient Bœotia, consecrated to Apollo and the Muses.

HELIER, ST. the capital of the island of Jersey, in the English Channel, on the coast of France, seated in St. Aubin's Bay, where it has a harbour, and a stone pier having the sea on the SW, and hills on the N. A large hill projects, in a manner, over the town, and has a pleasant walk, that affords an extensive prospect. The little island, St. Helier, about a mile in circuit, contains Elizabeth Castle, occupied by the governor and garrison; it is a peninsula from half-flood to half-ebb, during which time there is a passage, called the Bridge, which is half a mile long, and formed of sand and stones. It leads to the town, which is well paved, and has wide streets. The inhabitants are computed to be 2000, and in their place of worship the French and English languages are used alternately. Lat. 49 11 N lon. 2 10 W.

HELIGOLAND, a small island, on a rock, in the German Ocean, about 30 m. S of the mouth of the Weser and Elbe. It is 2½ m. in circumference, and contains 400 houses. The rock is on all sides steep and projecting; the ascent from the lower to the upper part of the town is by 191 wooden steps. Here are no trees, or even water fit for use. Its chief produce is sand-eels, used as bait in the cod fishery. The climate is much milder than on the neighbouring continent, and the sea seldom frozen. In summer the heat is intense in the lower town. The natives are descendants of Friesland, and maintain themselves by fishing, and serving as pilots. It is garrisoned by the English, and serves as a valuable depot for British merchandise and colonial produce, which is smuggled up the Elbe and Weser by Dutch boats, notwithstanding the vigilance of the French custom-house officers. HEREFORD, the capital of Heref. is an ancient, decayed place, 24 m. WNW of Gloucester, and 130 WNW of London. It contains 1500 houses. It is almost encompassed by the Wye, and two other rivers, over which are two bridges; and the only manufacture is that of gloves, and other leathern wares. Markets on Wedn. Frid. and Sat.

HEREFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W by Radnors. and Brecknocks.; on the N by Shrops.; on the E by Gloucest. and Worcest.; and on the S by Monmouths. and part of Gloucest. It extends about 38 m. from N to S, and 33 from E to W. It is divided into 11 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 6 market towns, 176 parishes, 391 villages, 18,570 houses, and 94,073 inhab. The air is healthy, the climate mild, the soil generally fertile, producing wheat, barley, oats, clover, turnips, &c. a principal part of the land being employed in tillage; the face of the country, rich, beautiful, and picturesque; and it abounds with wood. The cyder is sufficiently celebrated, and apples grow here in great abundance, being plentiful even in the hedge-rows. The sheep are small, affording a fine silky wool, in quality approaching to the Spanish; but the superior quality of the wool not being thought adequate to atone for the smallness of the carcase, the farmers, in general, are desirous of obtaining a breed larger and more profitable. The principal rivers are the Wye, Monnow, Lug, and Frome, all of which are well stored with fish, and the salmon, in particular, is very remarkable, for, in other parts of England, they are so far out of season, after spawning, as to be unwholesome food, till they have been again at sea to recover themselves; but here they are sound, fat, and fit for the table in all seasons.

Hereford, Little, Heref. on the Teme, W of Tenbury. Herefield, Yorks. NW of Ripley, near Patley Bridge.

Herston, Dorsets. in Purbeck Isle, a little W of Swanwich. Hertesheved, Yorks. near Dewsbury. Hertesheved, Northumb. near Alnham.

HERTFORD, the county town of Herts, 2 m. W by S of Ware, and 21 N of London; and contains 3900 inhab. It was of some note in the times of the ancient Britons; and the East Saxon kings often kept their court here. It is seated on the river Lea, which is navigable for barges, and down which vast quantities of corn and malt (about 5000 quarters per week of the latter) are sent to London. These and wool form the principal articles of the market. The situation is pleasant, dry, and healthy, and there are several public schools. In the beginning of the heptarchy, the river was navigable for ships up to the town; and, in 879, the Danes erected two forts here, for the security of their vessels, but Alfred turned the course of the river, so that their ships were left on dry ground. Hertford is much diminished in its splendour, since the N road was turned through Ware. Markets on Thursday and Saturday.

HERTFORDSHIRE, or HERTS, a county of England, bounded on the W by Bedf. and Bucks; on the N by Bedf. and Camb.; on the E by Essex; and on the S by Middlesex. It is 27 m. long from N to S, and 33 broad from E to W, and is divided into 8 hundreds, which contain 18 market towns, 135 parishes, 950 villages, 20,345 houses, and 111,654 inhab. The northern skirt of this county is hilly, forming a scattered part of the chalky ridge, which extends across the kingdom in this direction. A number of streams take their rise from this side, which, by their clearness, shew the general nature of the soil to be inclined to hardness, and but indifferent for meadow land. Flint stones are scattered, in great profusion, over the face of the country; and beds of chalk are frequently to be met with. It is found, however, with the aid of proper culture, to be extremely favourable to corn, both wheat and barley. The western part is, in general, a tolerably rich soil, and under excellent cultivation. The principal commodities of the county are wheat, barley, malt, and wood. The air is celebrated as very wholesome; and the principal rivers are the Lea, Stort, Coln, Gade, Bean, and Rib.

Hertingfordbury, 1½ m. from Hertford. Hertley Maudit, Hants, SE of Alton. Hertsmonceux, Sussex, 2 m. from Hailsham.

HESSE, a country of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, more than 80 m. in length, and unequal in breadth. It is surrounded by woods and mountains, in which are mines of iron and copper; in the middle are fine plains, fertile in corn and pastures, and there is plenty of vines, fruits, and honey; birch trees are very common, and they make a sort of wine of the sap. They likewise cultivate a large quantity of hops, and make excellent beer. Marble, alabaster, vitriol, sulphur, lead, alum, pipe-maker's clay, bole, &c. are also found in considerable quantities; and there are several salt springs, mineral waters, and medicinal baths. The house of Hesse is divided into two branches, namely, Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt. In both families are princes appenaged; those of Hesse-Cassel are Hesse-Philippithal and Rhinfels. Hesse-Homburg is the only appenage of Hesse-Darmstadt. Each of these has the title of landgrave.

HEXHAM, a town of Northumb. not populous, with narrow streets and ill-built houses, and contains about 5000 inhab. Its market-place, however, near the centre of the town, is a spacious square, supplied by a fountain with water. Its present church, which contains many ancient tombs, bears considerable marks of Saxon grandeur, and it was formerly famous for an abbey. The church had the privilege of a sanctuary till the reformation, (the extent of the privilege being marked by a cross, at a mile distance each way) and the Fridstol, or Stool of Peace, which, whoever took possession of, was sure of remission, is still remaining. On the screen, at the entrance of the choir, are some strange monastic paintings, called the Dance of Death. Hexham is believed to have been formerly a Roman station. It is now principally noted for its manufactory of tanned leather, shoes, and gloves; and is situated on a small stream, called the Hextold, near the Tyne, 22 m. W of Newcastle, and 284 NNW of London, and is governed by a bailiff. Markets on Tues. and Sat.

Hexley, Northumb. NE of Alnwick. Hexton, Herts, near Luton, in Bedfords. Heybarnes, or Heymill, Herts, on the Coln, SW of Yardley. Heybridge, Essex, on the river Blackwater, opposite to Malden.

HEYDEN, or HAYDON, a town of Northumb. 6 m. from Hexham, with a well-endowed grammar-school, and a fine bridge, of 6 arches, over the Tyne.

Heydon, Essex, near Barkway. Heydon, Glouc. in Boddington parish. Heydon, Norf. NW of Caston. Heyford Purcell, and Heyford Warren, Oxfords. on the E bank of the Charwell, NW of Bicester. Heyford, Upper and Lower, Northamps. on the river Nen, 7 m. from Towcester.

HEYLSHEN, a town in the late Austrian Brabant, 14 m. SE of Louvain.

HIELMAR, a lake of Sudermania, about 30 m. long, and from 2 to 7 wide. It is 60 m. W of Stockholm.

HIERES, a cluster of small islands, in the Mediterranean Sea, on the coast of the depart. of Var. Three of them, namely, Porquerolles, Porteros, or Port Cross, and Bagueau, are inhabited, and the Isle of Titan, the largest of them is capable of cultivation. They abound with medicinal plants. Between these islands and the continent, is the Road, or Gulf, of Hieres, an excellent and capacious pool or harbour.

HIERES, a town in the depart. of Var, seated in a pleasant and fruitful country, but its harbour being choked up, it is now much decayed. During great part of the winter, the verdure of the country is as fine as in the spring, and, in many gardens, green peas may be gathered. Near the town are large salt-works. It is situated on the side of a hill, with a canal cut from the salt lakes to the sea, 10 m. E of Toulon, and 350 S by E of Paris.

HIGHAM FERRERS, a small, but clean, and pleasant borough town of Northamp. with a castle near the church, the ruins of which are still visible. It is pleasantly seated on an ascent, near the river Nen, 14 m. NE of Northampton, and 69 NNW of London. Market on Sat.

Higham Park, Northamp. SE of Higham Ferrers. Higham Golvion, Bedf. 7 m. from Luton. Highgate, a large, populous hamlet, in the parishes of Hornsey and Pancras, 4 m. N by W of London. It has its name from its high situation on the top of a hill, and a gate erected there about 400 years ago, to receive toll for the bishop of London. One of the public houses here has a large pair of horns placed on the sign; and when the country people stop for refreshment, a pair of large horns, fixed to the end of a staff, is brought to them, and they are pressed to be sworn. If they consent, a kind of burlesque oath is administered, that they will never eat brown bread when they can get white, and other things of the same kind, which is altered according to the sexes, and which they repeat after the person who brings the horns; being allowed, however, to add to each article the words "except I like the other better." The whole being over, they must kiss the horns, and pay a shilling for the oath. In the neighbourhood are many elegant seats. Highley, Devons. near Okeford. Highley, Northumb. N of Morpeth, in the parish of Hartburn. Highley, Shrops. N of Wire Forest. Highlow, Derbys. in the High Peak. Highnam, 2 m. from Gloucester. Highney, Hunts. near Bruce Castle. Highon, Staff. In this parish there is a blade-mill, at which scythes, reaping-hooks, axes, hatchets, and such like tools, forged by the white-smiths, are ground to a fine edge.

HIMMALEH, MOUNT, a vast chain of mountains, in Asia, which extends from Cabul, along the N of Hindostan, and appears to be the general boundary of Thibet, through the whole extent, from the Ganges to the river Teesta, and particularly separating the countries of Cachimere and Cashgar from it: inclosing between it and Hindostan Proper, a tract of country from about 100 to 180 m. in breadth, divided into a number of small states, none of which are understood to be tributaries, or feudatories of Thibet; such as Sirinagur, Napaul, &c. This ridge was known to the ancients by the names of Imaus, and the Indian Caucasus. The natives call it Hindoo Ko, (the Indian Mountains) as well as Himmaleh, which last is a Sanscrit word, signifying snowy; its summit being covered with snow.

HIMS, or HEMS, a town of Syria, situated at the foot of Mount Libanus, in a plain, watered by a canal, which communicates with the Orontes, 93 m. N of Damascus. In the neighbourhood are the remains of a castle, supposed to have been built by the ancient kings of Assyria. The inhabitants carry on a considerable traffic in silk.

HIN, a town of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chensi, 200 m. SW of Pekin; and a town of China, of the second rank, in the province of Kiangnan, 480 m. SSE of Pekin.

Hincaster, Westmorl. in the parish of Heversham. Hinchingbrook, near Huntingdon, late a seat of the earl of Sandwich, in which is one of the most magnificent rooms to be seen in England.

HINCHINBROOK ISLAND, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific Ocean, a little to the N of Sandwich Islands: it is about 6 m. in circumference.

HINCKLEY, an ancient town of Leicester, 13 m. SW of Leicester, and 91 NNW of London, containing 1097 houses. From a high ground near the town, 50 churches may be seen, besides gentlemen's seats. It was formerly much larger, as the back lanes between the orchards appear to have been once streets. It has a considerable manufactory of stockings and fine ale. A good market on Mond. and a noted fair on August 28.

Hinckwol, Dorsets. W of W. Milton. Hindcomb, Dorsets. a hamlet of Chidiock.

HINDELOPEN, or HINLOPEN, a sea-port of W. Friesland, the inhabitants of which are principally employed in fishing and in building small vessels. It is seated on the Zuyder-Zee, with a small harbour, 21 m. SSW of Lewarden.

Hinderclay, Suffolk, 7 m. from Ixworth. Hinderthwaite, Yorks. N. Riding, near Rumbaldkirk. Hinderwell, Yorks. N. Riding, on the coast, W of Ramswick. Hindlep and Alfreton, a parish a little NE of Worcester. Hindley, in the parish of Wigan, Lancas. Hindolveston, Norf. 5 m. from Reepham.

HINDON, an ancient borough town of Wilts, 20 m. nearly W of Salisbury, and 97 WSW of London. Market on Thurs.

HINDOSTAN, a celebrated region of Asia, which, in its most extensive signification, comprises all the countries between the mountains of Tartary and Thibet on the N; the countries of Assam, Meckley, Aracan, and the Bay of Bengal, on the E and SE; the Indian Ocean on the S; and the same ocean and Persia on the W. But it may be more strictly considered under the three grand divisions of Hindostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindostan Proper, includes all the countries that lie to the N of the river Nerbudda, and of the soubahs of Bahar and Bengal. The principal soubahs, or provinces, in Hindostan Proper, are Agimere, Agra, Cashmere, Delhi, Guzerat, Lahore, Malwa, Moukan, Oude, Rohilcund, Sindy, &c. (for an account of which, see their respective names.) The term Deccan, which signifies the South, has been extended to the whole region that lies to the S of Hindostan Proper; but in its most proper and limited sense, it means only the countries situated between Hindostan Proper, the Carnatic, the Western Indian Sea, and Orissa; namely, the provinces of Candeish, Dowlatabad, Visiapour, Golconda, and the Western part of Berar. All the tract S of the Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula. The name India, by which this country, as far as it was known, is distinguished in the earliest Greek histories, appears to be derived from Hind, the name given to it by the ancient Persians, through whom the knowledge of the country was transmitted to the Greeks. The word Hindostan is, indeed, entirely of Persian origin, compounded of Stan, a region, and Hind, or Hindoo. The whole of Hindostan may now be said to consist of 5 principal states, which hold as tributaries, or feudatories, some numerous inferior states.

These principal states are the British; the Poonah Mahrattas; the Berar Mahrattas; Nizam Ally, soubah of the Deccan; and the Seiks, the greater part of the Mysore being now ceded to the English. The British possessions are Bengal, the greater part of Bahar, part of Allahabad, part of Orissa, the Northern Circars, a jaghire in the Carnatic, Baramahal, Dindigul, the Gallicut, Palicaud, and Coorga countries, and some considerable countries to the N and S of Calicut, on the coast of Malabar, with Bombay, and the Island of Salsette. The allies of the British, who may be considered as dependent on them, are the nabob of Oude; the nabob of the Carnatic, including Tanjore, Madura, Tinevelly, and Marrawars; the rajahs of Travancore; and the territory of Cochin. The Indian territory held by England, either in direct subjection, or through the intervention of dependent allies, contains more than 30,000,000 of inhabitants, (according to sir W. Jones,) and yields an annual revenue of 8,000,000 sterling. For the other principal states, see their respective names; and for an account of some inferior independent states, see BUNDELA, BALLOGISTAN, THE JATS, ROHILCUND, &c. Exclusive of the Europeans, the inhabitants of Hindostan are computed at 10,000,000 Mahometans, and 100,000,000 Hindoos. The Mahometans, or Mussulmans, whom the English commonly, but improperly, call Moors, or Moormen, are represented as bearing a very bad character. The Hindoos, or Gentoos, are of a black complexion, their hair long, their persons straight, their limbs neat, their fingers long and tapering, and their countenances open and pleasant. They are divided into different tribes or casts. The four principal tribes are the bramins, soldiers, labourers, and mechanics; and these are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are bramins of various degrees, who have the care of religion, or of the administration of the Gentoo law, allotted to them. These priests are held sacred by the Indians or Hindoos. Those who engage in worldly pursuits are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; for, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and exempted from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice, (under the Gentoo governments) they run into the greatest excesses. The soldiers are commonly called Rajah-poots; that is, descendants of the rajahs. They readily enter into the service of any that will pay them, and follow wherever he leads. The English have many battalions of them in their employ, under the name of Sepoys. The labourers include farmers, and all who cultivate the land. The mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade; these again are subdivided into each particular branch. Besides these, there are the Parians, or Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse or outcasts of the other tribes. They are a set of poor unhappy people, who are destined to perform the most disagreeable offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away every thing that is polluted. One description of these, or rather the outcasts of these outcasts, the Poulichees, on the Malabar coast, are held in such abomination, that if one of them happen to touch a Hindoo of a superior tribe, the latter does not scruple to draw his sabre and kill him on the spot; and for so atrocious an act, he is not even called to an account. All the different tribes are kept distinct from each other, by insurmountable barriers; they are forbidden to intermarry, to dwell together, to eat with each other, or even to drink out of the same vessel; and if they transgress any of these rules, they are obliged from that instant to join with the Hallachores. The Hindoos admit no converts, and are most firmly attached to their own superstitions, except the Hallachores, who are, some of them, glad to be admitted into any society where they are treated as fellow-creatures. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese in respect to the antiquity of their nation; and the doctrine of transmigration is one of their distinguishing tenets. Their institutions of religion form a regular and complete system, strengthened and upheld by every thing which can excite the reverence, and secure the attachment of the superstitious multitude. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious ceremonies splendid; and the absolute dominion which the bramins have obtained over the minds of the people, is supported by the command of the immense revenues, with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends, indeed, to a thousand particulars, which in other countries are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, custom, or fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoos is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee, (a kind of imperfect butter), milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. The warrior cast may eat of the flesh of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior casts may eat poultry and fish; but the inferior casts are prohibited from eating flesh or fish of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spices and perfumes, of which the great people are very lavish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. Their happiness consists in the solaces of domestic life; and they are taught by their religion, that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man, who does not entirely separate himself from the world, from a principal of devotion. Their religion permits them to have several wives; but they seldom have more than one; and their wives are distinguished by a decency of demeanour, a solicitude in their families, and a fidelity to their vows, which might do honour to human nature in the most civilized countries. The custom of women burning themselves on the death of their husbands, formerly much practised in Hindostan, is now on the decline. In 1743, near Cossimbuzar, when a widow, about 18, with three children, the eldest not 4 years of age, was strongly urged to live, for the sake of the future care of her infants; notwithstanding this, and though the agonies of death were described to her in the strongest colours, she put her finger into the fire with a calm and determined countenance, and held it a considerable time. She then, with one hand put fire into the palm of the other, sprinkled incense on it, and fumigated the Brahmins. Being then told, that she would not be permitted to burn, she resolutely answered, that death was in her own power, and that if she was not allowed to burn, she would starve herself. Her friends were obliged, at last, to consent to the dreadful sacrifice of this woman, who was of high rank. But, in 1781, Mr. Hodges was witness, near Benares, to the sacrifice of one of an inferior cast, the widow of a merchant. "Repairing to the spot," says he, "on the banks of a river, where the ceremony was to take place, I found the body of the man on a bier, covered with linen, already laid at the edge of the river. At this time, ten in the morning, only a few people were assembled, who displayed the most perfect apathy and indifference. After waiting a considerable time, the wife appeared, attended by the Brahmins, and music, with a few relations. The procession was slow and solemn; the victim moved with a steady and firm step; and, with a perfect composure of countenance, approached close to the body, where for some time they halted. She then addressed those who were near her, without the least trepidation of voice, or change of countenance. She held in her left hand a cocoa-nut, in which was a red colour mixed, and dipping in it the fore finger of her right hand, she marked those near her, to whom she wished to show the last act of attention. She might be about 24 years of age. Her dress was a loose robe of white flowing drapery, that extended from her head to the feet. The pile was composed of dried branches, leaves, and rushes, with a door on one side, and arched, and covered on the top; by the side of the door stood a man with a lighted brand. From the time the woman appeared, to the taking up of the body to convey it into the pile, might occupy half an hour, which was employed in prayer with the Brahmins, in attentions to those near her, and conversations with her relations. When the body was taken up, she followed close to it, attended by the chief Brahmin; and when it was deposited in the pile, she bowed to all around her, and entered without speaking. The moment she entered, the door was closed; the fire was put to the combustibles, which instantly flamed, and quantities of dried wood were thrown upon it. This last part of the ceremony was accompanied with the shouts of the multitude, who now became numerous, and the whole seemed a mass of confused rejoicing." The language of Hindostan has many dialects, but all derived from the Sanscrit; their literature contains several valuable and curious monuments, but the want of history, and chronology, renders their epochs extremely uncertain. The principal rivers are the Ganges, and Burrampoot. Hindostan, towards the N, is pretty temperate; but hot towards the S, and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products are rice, millet, cotton, figs, pomegranates, oranges, lemons, citrons, cocoa-trees, &c. There are mines of gold, silver, and diamonds. Beside domestic animals, here are elephants, rhinoceroses, buffaloes, lions, tigers, leopards, panthers, and monkeys, with camels and dromedaries. Its principal exports are sugar, indigo, saltpetre, silk, cotton, and precious stones; and particularly calicoes, chintzes, muslins, &c.

HINZUAN, or JOANNA, one of the Comora Islands, between the N end of Madagascar, and the continent of Africa, has been governed, for the last two centuries, by a colony of Arabs. The appearance of the island from the Bay of Hinzuan, is thus described by sir W. Jones: "We were at anchor in a bay, and before us was a vast amphitheatre, of which you may form a general notion by picturing in your minds a multitude of hills, infinitely varied in size and figure, and then supposing them to be thrown together, with a kind of artless symmetry, by all imaginable positions. The back ground was a series of mountains, one of which is pointed, near half a mile perpendicularly high from the level of the sea, and little more than three miles from the shore; all of them richly cloathed with wood, chiefly fruit-trees, of an exquisite verdure. I had seen many mountains of a stupendous height in Wales and Switzerland, but never saw one before, round the bosom of which the clouds were almost continually rolling, while its green summit rose flourishing above them, and received from them an additional brightness. Next to this distant range of hills was another tier, part of which appeared charmingly verdant, and part rather barren; but the contrast of colours changed even this nakedness into a beauty: nearer still were innumerable mountains, or rather cliffs, which brought down their verdure and fertility quite to the beach; so that every shade of green, the sweetest of colours, was displayed at one view, by land and by water. But nothing conduced more to the variety of this enchanting prospect than the many rows of palm-trees, especially the tall and graceful aracas, on the shores, in the valleys, and on the ridges of hills, where one might almost suppose them to have been planted regularly by design. A more beautiful appearance can scarce be conceived, than such a number of elegant palms in such a situation, with luxuriant tops, like verdant plumes, placed at just intervals, and showing between the part of the remoter landscape, while they left the rest to be supplied by the beholder's imagination." The town where the king resides is at the E side of the island, close to the sea, at the foot of a very high hill, and, though it is three-quarters of a mile in length, it does not contain above 200 houses. The houses are inclosed either with high stone walls, or palings made with a kind of reed; and the streets are little narrow alleys, extremely intricate, and forming a perfect labyrinth. The better kind of houses are built of stone, within a court-yard, have a portico to shield them from the sun, and one long, lofty room, where they receive guests; the other apartments being appropriated to the women. The sides of their rooms are covered with a number of small mirrors, bits of china-ware, and other little ornaments that they procure from the ships: the most superb of them are furnished with cane sofas, covered with chintz and satin mattresses. The horned cattle are a kind of buffaloes, having a large hump on their shoulders, which is very delicious eating; but there is not one horse, mule, nor ass, in all the island. The original natives, in number about 7000, occupy the hills, and are generally at war with the Arabian interlopers, who established themselves on the sea-coast by conquest, and are about 3000 in number. Though Joanna is not the largest, it may be reckoned the principal of the Comora islands; it claims sovereignty over, and exacts tribute from all the others. They have a regular form of government, and exercise the Mahometan religion; both being introduced by the Arabians. The colour of these two races of men are very different: the Arabs have not so deep a tinge as the others, being of a copper complexion, with neater features and a more animated countenance. They consider a black streak under the eye as ornamental; and this they make every day, with a painting-brush dipped in a kind of ointment. The custom of chewing the betel-nut prevails greatly here, as in most of the eastern countries. No one is without a purse or bag of betel; and it is looked on as a piece of civility to offer to their friend when they meet him, or take leave. Their religion licenses a plurality of wives, and likewise concubines. They are extremely jealous of them, and never allow any man to see the women: but female strangers are admitted into the harem; and some English women, whose curiosity has led them there, make favourable reports of their beauty, and richness of apparel, displayed in a profusion of ornaments of gold, silver, and beads, in form of necklaces, bracelets, and ear rings: they wear half a dozen or more in each, through holes bored along the outer rim of the ear. They are very temperate and abstemious, wine being forbidden them by the law of Mahomet. They are frequent in prayer, attending their mosques three or four times a day. The inhabitants, like those of most hot and tropical countries, are indolent, and do not improve by their labour the richness of their exuberant soil; indeed, the climate here promotes vegetation to such a degree, as requires little toil in the husbandman; and that little is denied; so that beyond oranges, bonanas, pine-apples, cocoa-nuts, yams, and purslain (all growing spontaneously) few vegetables are met with. HOLLAND, the most considerable of the Seven United Provinces, laying between the Zuyder Zee, the German Ocean, Zealand, Dutch Brabant, and Utrecht. It is divided into N. Holland, S. Holland, and W. Friseland; not the state or province of Friseland, but a district lying to the N of N. Holland. These together make but one province, whose states take the title of Holland and W. Friseland. The extent is not large, being not above 180 m. in circumference. The land is almost every where lower than the sea. The water is kept out by dykes, which they are particularly careful to keep in good repair, lest the whole province should be laid under water. It is crossed by the mouths of the Rhine and Maese, by several small rivers, and by a great number of canals, on which they travel day and night at a small expense. Properly speaking, it is nothing but a large meadow, and yet all things are in great plenty, in consequence of its trade; and the land feeds great numbers of cattle. In population, it is thought that no country in the world, of such a small extent, equals it, being calculated at 2,758,000 to a territory of 10,000 square miles. The pastures are so rich, that they have plenty of butter and cheese, and the seas and rivers furnish them with fish. There are, at least, 400 villages, and 29 walled towns, besides many others that enjoy municipal privileges. The cities are Dort, Haerlem, Delft, Leyden, Amsterdam, and Gouda. The chief towns are Rotterdam, the Hague, Maestricht, Utrecht, and Groningen. The principal manufactures are Silesia linens; pottery and painted tiles, particularly at Delft; also leather stuff and paper. It exports considerable quantities of butter and cheese, but not of the best quality. The houses are generally well-built, and extremely neat and clean. The established religion is Calvinism; but all religious sects are tolerated. Amsterdam is the capital. Holland was annexed to France in July, 1810; but recovered its liberty in November, 1813, recalling the prince of Orange from England, and proclaiming him Sovereign of the Netherlands.

HOLLAND, a district of Lincolns. in the SE part of the county. It is divided into Upper and Lower, and reaches from Wainfleet to the Isle of Ely, and to the grounds opposite Lynn in Norfolk. In nature, as well as appellation, it resembles a province of the same name in the Netherlands. It consists entirely of fens and marshes, in which are many quicksands, some in a state of nature, but others cut by numberless drains and canals, and crossed by raised causeways. The lower or southern division is the most watery, and is preserved from constant inundations by nothing but vast banks, raised on the sea-coast and rivers. It was formerly impassable; but since the fens have been drained the lands are grown more solid, and the inhabitants sow cole-seed upon them to their great advantage. Through the whole fenny district, the walls of the houses are generally of brick, and their roofs covered with slat. or tile. A stone house is rarely to be seen here, and as rarely one thatched with straw, but many of those of the more opulent farmers are large and handsome. The air is reckoned unwholesome, and the water, in general, is so brackish, as to be unfit for internal purposes; on which account, the inhabitants are obliged to make reservoirs of rain-water. In summer vast swarms of insects fill the air, and prove exceedingly offensive. Yet, even here, industry has produced comfort and opulence, by forming excellent pasture land out of swamps and bogs, and even making them capable of producing large crops of corn. The fens too, in their native state, are not without their utility, and afford various objects of curiosity to the naturalist. The reeds with which the waters of their fens are covered, make the best thatch, and are annually harvested in great quantities for that purpose. Prodigious flocks of geese are bred among the undrained fens, forming a considerable object of commerce, as well for their quills and feathers, as for the bird itself, which is driven in great numbers to the London markets. The principal decoys in England, for the various kinds of wild ducks, teals, widgeon, and other fowls of the duck kind, are in these parts. Wild geese, grebes, godwits, whimbrels, coots, ruffs, reeves, bitterns, and a great variety of other species of water-fowl, breed here in amazing numbers; and stares, or starlings, resort hither during winter in myriads, to roost on the reeds, breaking them down by their weight. Near Spalding is the greatest heronry in England, where the herons build together on high trees, like rooks. The avoset, or yelper, is found in great numbers about Fossdyke Wash, as are also knots and dottrels.

HOLLAND, NEW, the largest known land in the world: it extends from lat. 43 42 S, to within 10 30 of the equator; and from 110 30 to 153 30 E lon.; so that its square surface equals the habitable part of Europe. This vast island was first discovered in the beginning of the 17th century, and then it was called Terra Australis Incognita, and long after was supposed to be part of an immense southern continent. In the year 1628, the western part was discovered by some vessels belonging to the Dutch East-India Company, and called De Wit's Land, from the name of the commander who commanded the squadron. In 1642, capt. Tasman was sent by the Dutch East-India Company to survey the coast. He discovered the S, or rather the SE extremity, which he called Anthony Van Diemen's Land; to distinguish it from Diemen's Land, on the N coast, discovered in the year 1618. Captain Cook, in 1770, visited the E and NE parts, from 38° S, and spent four months in exploring a coast about 2000 m. in length. He ascertained its separation from New Guinea; and, in 1773, capt. Furneaux, by connecting Tasman's discoveries with Capt. Cook's, completed the circuit. In that part of it which Tasman distinguished by the name of Van Diemen's Land, and which was visited by Capt. Furneaux, in 1773, and again by Capt. Cook, in 1777, the land is, for the most part, of a good height, diversified with hills and valleys. See WALES, NEW SOUTH.

HOLSTEIN, a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, subject to the king of Denmark, having the Baltic on the E, the German Ocean on the W, Sleswick and the Baltic on the N, and Lunenburg, Lubeck, Hamburg, and the Elbe on the S. It is about 70 m. in length, and 48 in breadth, and is a pleasant country, fruitful in wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, and rape-seed, and producing horned cattle, sheep, rams, swine, horses, poultry, bears, and fish, in great abundance; it is also well seated for trade, and has some considerable harbours, particularly those of Hamburg and Lubeck. There are some imperial cities, which are governed by their respective magistrates; but the religion of the whole country is Lutheran. The duchy is divided into Holstein Gluckstadt, subject to the king of Denmark; and Holstein Gottorp, subject to the emperor of Russia. The governor, appointed by the king of Denmark, general, resides at Gluckstadt, and the regency court for Russian Holstein is held at Kiel. The intended junction between the Baltic and the North Sea, will be formed entirely through Holstein and the other Danish territories.

HOLYHEAD, a sea-port and cape of the Isle of Anglesea, rendered considerable by being the place where passengers usually embark for Dublin, there being packet-boats that sail for that city every day, except Tuesday, wind and weather permitting. It is noted for several remains of old fortifications, one of which, called Turris Munimentum, is an old stone wall, with a small turret on its centre; there are also some Druidical antiquities in its neighbourhood. Under the mountains that overhang the town, is a large cavern in the rock, supported by natural pillars, and called the parliament-house: it is accessible only by boats, and the tide runs into it. On the adjacent rocks, the herb grows of which they make kelp, a fixed salt used in making glass, and in alum-works; and in the neighbourhood is a large vein of white fuller's earth, and another of yellow. On the Isle of Skerries, 9 m. to the N, is a lighthouse. Large flocks of puffins are often seen here; they all come in one night, and depart in the same manner. The commodities are butter, cheese, bacon, wild-fowl, lobsters, crabs, oysters, razor-fish, shrimps, herrings, codfish, whitings, sea-tenches, and plenty of other fish. It is, in fact, little more than a fishing-town, with three good inns, and it has a very convenient harbour for the northern trade, when taken short by contrary winds. It is situated near the extremity of the island, joined to the NW part of it by a stone bridge, of one arch, 60 m. E of Dublin, 24 nearly W of Beaumaris, and 260 NW of London. Lat. 53 19 N lon. 4 34 W. A small market on Sat.

Holy Hill, Shrops. SW of Bridgenorth.

HOLY ISLAND, or LINDISFARNE, a small island on the coast of Northumberland, about 6 m. SE of Berwick, and 1½ from the nearest land, from whence, at low water, people ride over to it. It is 2¼ m. long, and 1 in breadth, and consists of one continued plain. The soil is rocky and full of stones, for which reason it is thinly peopled; it has but one small town, or rather village, standing on a rising ground; it consists of a few scattered houses, chiefly inhabited by fishermen, with two inns, and a church. Under the castle, which stands at the southern point, on almost a perpendicular rock, near 60 feet high, there is a commodious bay, or harbour, defended by a blockhouse. The castle is accessible only by a narrow, winding pass, cut out of the rock, on its southern side. The N and NE coasts of the island are formed of perpendicular rocks, the other sides sink by gradual slopes to the sand. It has plenty of fish and fowl, but the air and soil are reckoned bad. The W part is left wholly to the rabbits, and there is not a tree on the island. The monastery, which covered near four acres, is entirely in ruins, but there are various fragments of the offices remaining. It is properly a semi-island, being encompassed with water at every flood, but sand at ebb. The E part, which is much the broadest, is joined to the W by a small slip of land.

Holy Island, in Clare, Munster.

HOLYWELL, a town of Flints. 10 m. E of St. Asaph, and 212 NE of London, which, although in a great part new, is, from its vicinity to the lead-mines, and its considerable manufactures, become the most flourishing in the county. It takes its name from the famous well, called St. Winifred's, concerning which so many fables and superstitious notions have prevailed. It is a copious stream of very cold and pure water, bursting out of the ground, at the foot of a hill, with such impetuosity as to discharge 21 tons of water in a minute. Over the spring there is a chapel, built by the countess of Derby, mother of Henry VII. which stands upon pillars, and on the windows are painted the history of St. Winifred's life. Beside the cold bath, celebrated for wonderful cures, formed at the spring-head, and covered with a beautiful Gothic shrine, it is now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass-wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. Market on Frid.

HONAN, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of the province of Honan. It is situated in the centre of the empire, 360 m. SSW of Pekin.

HONDURAS, an extensive province of N. America, bounded on the N by the bay of the same name, on the E by the Mosquitos shore, on the S by Nicaragua and Guatimala, and on the W by Guatimala and Vera Paz. This country, though exceedingly fertile by nature, is almost a desert. The soil, in many parts, bears Indian corn and grapes three times a year; its other produce is wheat, peas, large gourds, cotton, wool, honey, wax, and provisions of all kinds. It produces in greater abundance than any part of America the logwood-tree, which, in dying some colours, is so far preferable to any other material, that the consumption of it in Europe is considerable; and it is become an article in commerce of great value. During a long period, no European nation intruded upon the Spaniards in these provinces, or attempted to obtain any share in this branch of trade. But after the conquest of Jamaica by the English, one of the first objects of the settlers, on that island, was the great profit arising from the logwood trade, and the facility of wresting some portion of it from the Spaniards. Their first attempt was made at Cape Catoche, the NE promontory of Yucatan. When most of the trees near this Cape were felled, they removed to the Island of Trist, in the Bay of Campeachy; and, in later times, their principal station has been in the Bay of Honduras. The Spaniards, alarmed at this encroachment, endeavoured by negociation, remonstrances, and open force, to prevent the English from obtaining any footing on that part of the American continent. But, after struggling against it for more than a century, the disasters of an unsuccessful war extorted from the court of Madrid, in 1763, a reluctant consent to tolerate this settlement of foreigners in the heart of its territories. This privilege was confirmed by the definitive treaty of 1783; by which, however, it was stipulated, that nothing in this concession should be considered as derogating, in any respect, from 'the sovereignty of his Catholic Majesty;' that if the English had erected any fortifications in the country, they should be demolished, and none erected in future; and that they should confine themselves within a certain district, lying between the rivers Wallis, or Bellize, and Rio Honda, taking the course of the said two rivers for unalterable boundaries, so as that the navigation of them be common to both nations. But, by a convention signed in 1786, these limits were extended; the English line, beginning from the sea, was to take the centre of the river Sibun, or Jabon, and continue up to the source of the said river; thence to cross, in a straight line, the intermediate land, till it intersected the river Wallis; and by the centre of the same river, the said line was to descend to the point where it would meet the line already settled in 1783. By this convention, moreover, the English were not only permitted to cut logwood, but mahogany, or any other kind of wood, and to carry away any other produce of the country; with certain exceptions, however, against the establishing of any plantations of sugar, coffee, &c.; and they were likewise permitted, with certain restrictions, to occupy the small island called Casina, St. George's Key, or Cayo Casina. The English settlement in this country had formerly been considered as foreign; but, in 1790, by an act of parliament, they were allowed all the privileges of a British colony. The principal towns are Valladolid, the capital; Truxillo, Gracias á Dios, and St. Jago.

HOTTENTOTS, COUNTRY OF THE, a large region in the southern extremity of Africa, which extends N by W along the coast, from the Cape of Good Hope, beyond the mouth of Orange River, and from that Cape, in an ENE direction, to the mouth of the Great Fish River, which parts it from Caffraria Proper. There are no considerable kingdoms throughout this large extent of country, the whole being inhabited by different tribes, or nations, governed by honquers, or chiefs, who live like the Arabs, in huts, or portable houses, and remove their kraals, or villages, whenever the pasture becomes too bare for the subsistence of their cattle, and upon the natural and violent death of an inhabitant. The Hottentots of the Cape consist of a few paltry and miserable hordes, who have not even the power of choosing their own chief, and live as they can, in different cantons of the colony; but the savage Hottentots, called, by way of derision, the Jackall Hottentots, far removed from the government of the Europeans, still preserve their original manners. The Hottentots, in general, are as tall as most Europeans, but more slender, and the hands and feet are small. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, somewhat resembling that of an European who has the jaundice in a high degree; but this colour is not at all observable in the whites of the eyes. There are not such thick lips among the Hottentots as among their neighbours the Negroes, the Caffrees, and the Mozambiques. Their mouth is of the middling size; and they have, in general, the finest set of teeth imaginable. Their heads are covered with hair more woolly, if possible, than that of the Negroes. Not only the men, but the women also are clothed with sheep-skins; the wool being worn outward in summer, and inward during the winter. They wear one skin over their shoulders, the ends of it crossing each other before, and leaving their neck bare. Another skin is fastened round their middle, and reaches down to their knees. They besmear their bodies all over, very copiously, with fat, in which there is mixed up a little soot, and this is never wiped off. They likewise perfume themselves with powder of herbs, with which they powder both the head and body, rubbing it all over them, when they besmear themselves. The odour of this powder is rank and aromatic, and comes nearest to that of the poppy mixed with spices. Some of them adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. The women cover themselves much more scrupulously than the men. They seldom content themselves with one covering, but almost always have two, and very often three. These are ma[redacted]pared and well-greased skin, and are [redacted]out their bodies with a thong, almos[redacted] aprons of European women. The o[redacted]s always the largest, measuring from [redacted]inches to a foot over. This is likew[redacted]rally, the finest and most showy, an[redacted]uently adorned with glass beads, stru[redacted]fferent figures. Both the men and w[redacted]nerally go bareheaded. Neither thei[redacted]r nose are adorned with any pendent [redacted]s, as they are among other savages. [redacted]se, however, is sometimes, by way of [redacted] state, marked with a black streak of soo[redacted]h a large spot of red lead; of which latt[redacted]heir high days and holidays, they likew[redacted] a little on their cheeks. Both sexes [redacted]ngs on their arms and legs; most of these [redacted]ade of thick leather straps, cut in a circ[redacted]hape; and these have given rise to the a[redacted] universally received notion, that the H[redacted]tots wrap guts about their legs, in order [redacted]t them occasionally. Rings of iron, co[redacted] or brass, of the size of a goose-quill, ar[redacted]nsidered as more genteel than those of lea[redacted] but the girls are not allowed to use any [redacted] till they are marriageable. The Hotten[redacted] seldom wear any shoes; what they do wea[redacted]e made of undressed leather, with the hairy [redacted]le outward; they are rendered soft and pl[redacted]ight being beat and moistened, and are ve[redacted]m and cool. Their habitations are some of [redacted], of a circular, and some of an oblong sh[redacted]e, resembling a round bee-hive, or a vault; [redacted] ground-plot is from 18 to 24 feet in diameter. The highest of them are so low, that it is scarcely possible for a middle-sized man to stand upright. But neither the lowness of the hut, nor that of the door, which is barely three feet high, can be considered as any inconvenience to a Hottentot, who finds no difficulty in stooping, and crawling on all fours. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit or lie round it in a circle. The low door is the only place that admits the light, and, at the same time, the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The Hottentot, inured to it from his infancy, sees it hover round him, without feeling the least inconvenience arising from it to his eyes; while, rolled up like a hedge-hog, and wrapped up snug in his skin, he lies at the bottom of his hut, quite at his ease, in the midst of this cloud, except that he is now and then obliged to peep out from beneath his sheep-skin, in order to stir the fire, or, perhaps, to light his pipe, or else, sometimes, to turn the steak he is broiling over the coals. The order of these huts, in a kraal, or clan, is most frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. The milk, as soon as it is taken from the cow, is put to other milk, which is curdled, and is kept in a leather sack, the hairy side so which, being considered as the cleanest, is turned inward; so that the milk is never drank while it is sweet. Among other tribes of Hottentots are the Boshiesman, or Boshmans, who inhabit the mountains in the interior part of the country, NE of the Cape of Good Hope, and are averse to the pastoral life. Some of their maxims are to live on hunting and plunder, and never to keep any animal alive for the space of one night. On this account, they themselves are pursued, and sometimes exterminated, like wild beasts, or taken and made slaves of. Bushes and clefts in rocks serve them by turns for dwellings. Many of them are entirely naked, but some of them cover their body with the skin of any sort of animal, great or small, from the shoulder downward as far as it will reach, wearing it till it falls off their backs in rags. Another tribe, near the mouth of Orange river, have huts superior to those of the generality of Hottentots; they are loftier, and thatched with grass; and are furnished with stools made of the back-bones of the grampus. Their mode of living is, in the highest degree, wretched. Their dress is composed of the skins of seals and jackals, the flesh of which they eat. When a grampus is cast ashore, they remove their huts to the place, and subsist upon it as long as any part of it remains; and, in this manner, it sometimes affords them sustenance for half a year, though in a great measure decayed, and putrified by the sun. They smear their skin with the oil, the odour of which is so powerful, that their approach may be perceived some time before they present themselves to view. Though one small hut contains the whole family, and all are obliged to repose together, they are chaste in their manners. Severe in their jurisprudence, they punish murder, adultery, and robbery with death. From the observance of dancings or rejoicings at the full and change of the moon, they appear to be idolatrous. The country possessed by the Dutch is of pretty considerable extent, comprehending, not only the large tract between Table Bay and False Bay, but that which is called Hottentot Holland, extending from False Bay to the Cabo dos Agulhas, or Cape of Needles, and the country farther E beyond St. Christopher's River, called Terra de Natal. The coast of this country abounds in bays and capes; it is naturally mountainous and barren; but the industrious Dutch have overcome all natural difficulties, and it not only produces a sufficiency of the necessaries of life for the inhabitants, but also of refreshments for all the European ships that touch here. In the interior parts, however, the soil is astonishingly fertile and productive. The Dutch consider the year as divided into two seasons, which they term monsoons; the wet monsoon, or winter; and the dry one, or summer. The first begins with our spring; the latter when our summer ends. In the damp season, the Cape is much subject to fogs; and, from the middle of the wet monsoon, it rains almost continually till summer: the weather is cold, raw, and unpleasant; but never more rigorous than autumn in Germany. Water never freezes to above the thickness of half-a-crown, and, as soon as the sun appears, the ice is dissolved. The Cape is rarely visited by thunder and lightning, excepting a little near the turn of the seasons. Among the quadrupeds of this country are antelopes, which go in herds of 20 or 30,000 each; buffaloes; giraffes, or camelopardalises; the gems-bock, or chamois, a species of antelope, which has remarkably long, sharp horns, and, when attacked by dogs, will sit on its hind quarters, and defend itself; wild dogs, much larger than the jackal, which travel in herds, and are very destructive to flocks of sheep; elephants; elks; hyenas; the koedo, an animal of a mouse-colour, rather larger than our deer, with three white stripes over the back, and the male having very large, twisted horns; lions; jackals; tigers; panthers; the quacha, a species of the zebra, but more tractable; the double-horned rhinoceros; horses; domestic horned cattle; common sheep; and a peculiar species of sheep, which are covered with hair instead of wool. The hippopotamus, or river-horse, is frequently seen here. Among the birds are vultures; ostriches, whose eggs are excellent food; and the loxia, a species of gregarious bird, which builds its curious nest in the mimosa tree, where it forms a kind of thatched house, with a regular street of nests on both sides, at about two inches distance from each other, and containing under its roof several hundred, or a thousand birds. The termites, or white ants, which do no injury to the wood, as in the E. Indies, but only to the grass, the destruction of which they occasion by raising a number of hills, which impede the progress of vegetation. The Hottentots eat them; and this food is found to be far from disagreeable. The locusts also are esteemed excellent food by the Boshmans, by whom they are dried and kept for use. The black, or rock scorpion, is nearly as venomous here as any of the serpent tribe, of which there are numerous kinds. There are six species about the Cape; namely, the horned snake, about 18 inches long, the most poisonous of them all; the kouse band, or garter snake, about the same length, dangerous to travellers, on account of resembling the soil so much in colour that it is not readily perceived; the yellow snake, which differs in colour only from the hooded snake of India, and being from four to eight feet in length, their size and bright yellow colour renders it easy to avoid them; the puff adder, about 40 inches in length, so called from blowing itself up to near a foot in circumference: the spring adder, very dangerous, but not common, from three to four feet long, and of a jet black, with white spots; and the night snake, more beautiful than any of the others, about 20 inches long, very thin, belted with black, red, and yellow, and when near, at night, has the appearance of fire. The country of the Hottentots lies between the tropic of Capricorn and 35 degrees S lat. and is bounded on the W, S, and E, by the Atlantic and Indian Oceans, and on the N by regions very little, if at all, explored.

Hotton, Leices. NE of Loughborough.

Here Edmund, king of the East Angles, was bound to a tree, and shot to death with arrows by the pagan Danes, because he would not renounce the Christian religion. A monastery was afterwards erected here to his memory.

HOXTER, a small town in Westphalia, belonging to the Abbey of Corvey, from which it is distant 3 m. NW.

Hoxton, or Hogsdon, Midd. a populous hamlet in the parish of Shoreditch.

HOY, one of the Orkney Islands, situated between the island of Pomona and the N coast of Caithness. It is about 11 m. long and more than 3 broad. On this island, besides the great conic hill of Hoyhead, which is a seamark, there is a stupendous rock, called the Beary, where a bird, here named the layer, supposed to be a species of the penguin, is found. It is about the size of a small duck, remarkably fat, and esteemed a great delicacy. These birds burrow in the rabbit holes. The person employed in taking the young, is usually let down by a rope from the top of the precipice. In this island too, in a gloomy valley, is an entire stone, 36 feet long and 18 broad, called the Dwarfie Stone. It is hollow within, having the form of a bed and pillow cut in the stone; it is supposed to have been once the habitation of a hermit. Lat. 58 56 N lon. 3 20 W.

HOYA, a town, and sandy, heathy county of Westphalia (yet with some good meadows, pastures, and arable land), subject to Hanover since 1705, except a small part which belongs to Hesse Cassel. It is about 32 m. long and 29 broad, and contains 17 small towns, besides the capital (which is situated on the Weser, 24 m. SSE of Bremen), and 54 parishes.

HOYER, a town of Sleswick, situated on the coast of the North Sea, 4 m. W of Tundern, celebrated for its oyster fishery.

Hoyland, High, Yorks. W. Riding, in Wentworth parish. Hoyland, Swain, Yorks. NW of Barnesley, in the parish of Silkstone.

HRADISCH, a town, capital of a circle of Moravia, celebrated for its excellent wines and fruits, situated on the river Moraw, 30 m. SSE of Olmutz.

HUA, or KAHUA, a large town, the capital of Cochin China, with a handsome palace, where the king commonly resides. It is seated in a beautiful plain, and divided into two parts by a large river. The inhabitants blacken their teeth, thinking it a shame to have them white, like dogs, and they wear their nails very long. There are a few Christians here. Lat. 17 40 N lon. 105 5 E.

HUAHEINE, one of the Society Islands, in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 30 leag. from Otaheite, and 8 in compass, with a commodious but small harbour on the W coast, called Owharra, affording good anchorage, in 18 fathoms water, and sheltered from all winds. It is separated by a deep gulf into two peninsulas, united by an isthmus, which is overflowed by the sea in high tides. Its surface is hilly and uneven. Lat. 16 44 S lon. 151 1 W.

Hubberham, Yorks. W. Riding, NE of Settle.

Hubberston, in Pembrokes. situated on a creek of Milford Haven. It is the station of the packet to Waterford, in Ireland.

HUDDERSFIELD, a town in the W. Riding of Yorks. situated on the Calder, amid barren moors, 25 m. NE of Manchester, 42 SW of York, and 189 NNW of London, which has risen to consequence within this century. It is a sort of mart for narrow cloths, fine and coarse, fine broad cloths, serges, kerseymeres, &c. It contains 1870 houses, and 9670 inhab. Market on Tues. when the cloth is exposed to sale in a large hall, and merchants and wool-staplers attend from a considerable distance.

Huddington, Worcest. 4 m. SE of Droitwich. Huddlesteow, Cumb. between Penrith and Kirkhaugh. Huddleston, Yorks. W. Riding, near Skirbyrn, is famous for a quarry of stone, reckoned the finest in England. When first dug out, it is soft, but hardens by lying in the air. King Henry VII.'s chapel, at Westminster, was mostly built of the stone fetched from hence. Hude, a river in Durh. which runs into the Tees at Middleton, 7 m. above Barnard Castle. Hudlany, Lancas. near Halsingden.

HUDSON, a town of New York, an industrious, flourishing, trading spot, on which are erected upwards of 200 dwelling houses, bordering spacious streets, and peopled by more than 1800 souls: on which several public buildings, convenient stores, commodious wharfs, and suitable out-houses are built; on which there are two covered rope-walks, spermaceti works, one of the best distilleries in America, and on which mechanics of every kind are collected; yet, in the autumn of 1783, was nothing better than a mere farm, where the solitary husbandman passed some time twice in a season. No place in America, except Baltimore, in Maryland, presents a more obvious instance of commercial enterprise and progressive increase, than this town, which is surrounded by an extensive back country. Hudson is seated on the E side of the river of that name, 30 m. S of Albany, and 120 N of New York.

HUDSON'S BAY, a large bay of North America, lying between 51 and 67 deg. of N lat. and discovered in 1610 by captain Henry Hudson. The country lying round Hudson's Bay on the W and SW is called New N. and New S. Wales. The extensive peninsula to the E of it is called Labrador, or New Britain. The entrance of the Bay from the ocean, after leaving Cape Farewell and Davis' Straits, is between Resolution Isles on the N and Button's Isles on the S, forming the eastern extremity of the straits, distinguished by the name of its first discoverer. The vast countries that surround Hudson's Bay, abound with animals, whose skins and furs are far superior in quality to those found in less northerly regions. In 1670, a charter was granted to a company, which does not consist of above ten persons, for the exclusive trade to this bay, and for planting the country; and they have acted under it ever since, with great benefit to themselves, but little comparative advantage to the kingdom at large. Of late years, however, the fur trade, from the inland parts, has been carried on to a much greater extent than it was before. This has been chiefly occasioned by the interference of the Canada traders, who had effectually supplanted the company on the sea-shore, supplying the natives with every conveniency for war and domestic uses. This induced the company, in 1773, to begin their inland voyages; and now the Canadians, from Canada, and the Europeans, from Hudson's Bay, frequently meet together. The servants of the company, however, imported principally from the Orkney Isles, having ingratiated themselves into the confidence of the natives, from their prudent, proper behaviour, and incorruptible honesty, have evidently the advantage of trade on their side. They consequently export a greater quantity of furs (in proportion to the goods imported), and these in better preservation and more valuable. They employ 4 ships, and about 130 seamen, and have several forts; namely, Prince of Wales' Fort, Churchill River; York Fort, Nelson River; New Severn; and Albany; which are all seated on the WSW side of the Bay.

HUDSON'S RIVER, one of the finest rivers in N. America, rising in a mountainous country, in the NE part of the state of New York, about half way between the Lakes Ontario and Champlain. It waters Albany and Hudson, and proceeds, in a southerly direction, almost its whole course, to the Atlantic Ocean, which it enters at York Bay, 10 m. S of New York, after a course of 250 m. The tide flows a few miles above Albany, which is 160 m. from New York. It is navigable for sloops of 70 or 80 tons to Albany, and for ships to Hudson.

HUDSON'S STRAITS, the narrow sea between the Atlantic Ocean and Hudson's Bay, N of Labrador.

Hudswell, in the parish of Catterich, Yorks. 3 m. S of Richmond. Hudsfield, Gloucest. in Lydney parish.

HUEN, a fertile island of the Baltic, in the Sound, subject to Sweden since the treaty of Roschild, in 1658. It has only one village, containing about 50 houses. This island was granted by Frederick II. king of Denmark, to Tycho Brahe, the celebrated astronomer, with a castle called Uranienburg, erected for the purpose of making observations, in which he resided upwards of 20 years. It is about 6 m. in circumference, and lies 14 m. N by E of Copenhagen.

HUESCA, an ancient and considerable town of Arragon, with an university. It is situated on the Isuela, 27 m. NNE of Saragossa.

HUESCAR, a town of Granada.

HULL, or KINGSTON-UPON-HULL, a large, closely-built, well-paved, and exceedingly populous town in the E. Riding of Yorks. seated on a river called the Hull, which rises not far from Driffield, and here enters the river Humber, 36 m. SE of York, and 173 N of London. It contains 4166 houses, and 26,792 inhab. Its commerce has been constantly increasing so much of late years, that it is now probably become the fourth port in the kingdom. Its situation is extremely advantageous; for, besides its communication with the Yorks. rivers and canals, it has access also, by the Humber, to the Trent, and all its branches and communications. Hence it has the import and export trade of many of the northern and midland counties. By the late inland navigations, it has also a communication with the rivers Mersey, Dee, Ribble, Severn, Thames, Avon, &c. which navigation, including its windings, extends above 500 m. in the counties of Linc. Notts. Yorks. Lancas. Westm. Chester, Staffords. Warw. Leicest. Oxf. Worcest. &c. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic; but it has also regular traffic with the southern parts of Europe, and with America. More ships are sent hence to Greenland than from any other port, that of London excepted. The coasting trade, also, for coal, corn, wool, manufactured goods, &c. is very extensive. The harbour is chiefly artificial, consisting of a dock, the largest in the kingdom (finished in 1778), with which the river communicates, and in which 800 ships may ride safely and conveniently. Among the public buildings, are the Trinity House, for the relief of seamen and their widows; an exchange, and a town-hall. The grand stone bridge over the river to Holderness, was rebuilt in 1787, and consists of 14 arches. Markets on Tues. and Sat.

Hulland, in the parish of Ashborn, Derbys. Hullased, Glouces. in Coates parish. Hullavington, Wilts, between Castlecomb and Malmesbury. Hullbridge, Essex, on the Crouch, W of Wallfleet. Hullend, Herts, N of Standon. Hullingwick, Heref. HULST, a small, but ancient and strongly-fortified town of Dutch Flanders, with 12 dependent villages, situated among marshes, on a canal which communicates with the Scheldt, 16 m. NNE of Ghent.

Hulton, 3 villages in the parish of Dean, Lancas. 3 m. from Bolton.

HUMBER, a river formed by the junction of the Trent, Ouse, Derwent, and several other streams. It divides Yorks. from Linc. and falls into the German Ocean between Spurn Head and Saltfleet.

Humber, Heref. between Bromyard and Leominster. Humberstone, 2 m. N by E of Leicester. Humberstone, Linc. SE of Grimsby. Humberton, Yorks. N of Boroughbridge. Humbie, 8 m. from Haddington, Scotland. Humbleton, Northumb. near Woller, in the parish of Doddington. Here is an entrenchment called Green Castle; and on Humbledon Hugh, a circular entrenchment, with a large barrow. The sides of the hill are cut into terraces, 20 feet wide, formed with great exactness, one above another. In the plain below is a stone pillar, denoting the ground where 10,000 Scots, under Earl Douglas, in the reign of Henry IV. were defeated on Holyrood Day, by Henry, Lord Percy, and George, Earl of March. Humbleton, Yorks. near Burton Constable. Humby, Linc. by Lincoln Heath.

HUME, a town of S. Carolina.

Himmington, Wilts, SW of Salisbury.

HUMMOCH, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, about 6 m. in length. Here is a rajah, supported in his authority by the Dutch E. India company. The natives resemble the Malays, both in appearance and disposition, but speak the same language as the inhabitants of Mindanao. This island is exceedingly fertile, and produces most of the tropical fruits. But their principal articles of trade with the Dutch are bees' wax and honey. It lies about 15 m. S of the S point of Mindanao. Lat. 5 27 N. lon. 125 12 E.

HUMOL'S TOWN, a town of Pennsylvania.

HUNDSMARCK, a town of Stiria, situated on the Muehr.

Hunfleet, or Hunsleet, Yorks. on the S bank of the Aire, almost opposite Leeds. It has long been eminent for clothiers.

HUNGARY, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the W by Moravia and the circle of Austria; on the N and NE by Poland; on the E by Walachia, Transylvania, and part of Moldavia; and on the S by Servia and the river Drave, which separates it from Sclavonia and Croatia. It is divided into Upper and Lower Hungary; and to these may be added the Bannat of Temeswar, incorporated into the kingdom of Hungary in 1778. Hungary formerly included Transylvania, Sclavonia, Dalmatia, Servia, Walachia, and other countries. The principal rivers are the Danube, Save, Drave, Theisse, Temes, Leitha, Raab, Waag, Gran, and Matos. The air in the southern parts is unhealthy, occasioned by the lakes and bogs, insomuch that a sort of plague visits them every three or four years, on which account it is called the grave of the Germans. It abounds in all the necessaries of life, and the wine, especially that called Tokay, is excellent. There are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron; and they have such plenty of game, that hunting is allowed to all. Almost all the towns of Hungary have two names, the one German, and the other Hungarian; and the language is a dialect of the Sclavonian. The government is hereditary in the house of Austria, whether male or female; and the established religion is Popery, though there are a great number of Protestants. No country in the world is better supplied with minerals and baths; and those of Buda, when the Turks had it in their possession, were reckoned the finest in Europe. Buda is the capital town of Lower Hungary, and Presburg of the Upper.

HUNGERFORD, formerly called INGLEFORD CHARNHAM STREET, a town of Berks, seated on the river Kennet, which separates it from Wilts, 9 m. W of Newbury, and 64 W of London. Market on Wedn.

HUNTINGDON, a town of Pennsylvania.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W and N by Northamp. on the NE and E by Cambridges. and on the S by a part of Cambridges. and Bedf. It extends 22 m. from N to S, and about 18 from E to W. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen. It is divided into 4 hundreds, which contain 5 market-towns, 78 parishes, 279 villages, 7566 houses, and 42,208 inhab. The borders of the Ouse, which flows across the SE part, consist of fertile and very beautiful meadows. The middle and western parts are finely varied in their surface, fertile in corn, and sprinkled with woods. The whole upland part was, in ancient times, a forest, peculiarly adapted for hunting, whence the name of the county took its rise. The NE part consists of fens, which join those of Ely; but they are drained, so as to afford rich pasturage for cattle, and even large crops of corn; and in the midst of them are shallow pools, abounding with fish. The largest of these is a lake of considerable size, called Whittlesea Mere. The air is good, except in the fenny parts, which are agdish. Its chief commodities are corn, malt, and cheese; and they fatten abundance of cattle.

HUY, a fortified town of Liege, situated on the Maese, which divides it into two parts, and over which it has an elegant bridge, built in a superior manner, in 1714, 12 m. SSW of the city of Liege. It was formerly fortified, but its fortifications were destroyed by the Dutch, in 1718, when they surrendered it to the bishop.

Hyde Park, on the right of Knightsbridge, and W end of the metropolis, formerly a manor to the church of Westminster, till it was exchanged with the crown in the reign of Henry VIII. and originally contained 620 acres. The canal, which is supplied by a small stream from Bayswater, was cut in 1730, by order of queen Caroline.

HYDE, a county of N. Carolina.

Hyde, Berks, in Denchworth parish. Hyde, Dorsets. between Bere and Wareham. Hyde, Warw. on the borders of Leicest. and in Hinckley parish. Hyde Abbey, Hants, near Winchester, first erected in the year 901, by Alfred, king of the West Saxons. It was the burial place of several Anglo-Saxon princes. Little now remains of this ancient and noble edifice, but a gateway and some fragments of walls. Hyde Farm, Gloucest. a hamlet to Guiting Temple.

HYDRABAD, a very large city of Hindostan, capital of the province of Golconda, or Hydrabad, and at this time of the Deccan. It is supposed to contain upwards of 100,000 inhab. and is seated on a river that falls into the Kistna, 270 m. NNW of Madras. Lat. 17 12 N lon. 78 51 E.

HYDRABAD, a fortress of Hindostan, in the province of Sindy. It is the residence of the Mahometan prince of that country, who is tributary to the king of Candahar. It is situated on the Indus, not far above the head of the Delta, and in the neighbourhood of the city of Nusserpour.

Hylderthorp, Yorks. about a mile S of Burlington, near the sea. Hyle Lake, Chesh. between the mouths of the Dee and Mersey, where outward-bound ships often wait for a wind. Hylton, Shrops. HYPOLITE, ST. a small town in the depart. of Gard, seated on the Vidourle, near its source, 14 m. NW of Nismes; also a town in the depart. of the Doubs, 4 m. ENE of Besançon; and a town in the depart. of the Aveiron, 24 m. N of Rhodez.

Hirst, Linc. in Axholm Isle. Hysham, W of Lancaster. Hythe, Somersets. near Chedder. Hythe, or Hyth, near Colchester, and the harbour of that town.

HYTHE, a town in Kent, one of the Cinque Ports. It had formerly four parishes; but its harbour having been choked up, it has now but one. There is a very remarkable pile of dry bones in this town, 28 feet long, 6 feet broad, and 8 high; they are preserved in a vault under the church, like books in a library, and consist of several thousand heads, arms, legs, thigh-bones, &c. some very gigantic; and appear, by an inscription, to be the remains of the Danes and Britons, killed in a battle near this place, prior to the Norman conquest. It is 9 m. SW of Dover, and 68 SE of London. Market on Sat.

Hythe, Hants, has a ferry over Southampton Water to Southampton.

JAAR, a river of Liege, which passes by Tongres, and falls into the Maes at Maestricht.

JACATRA, a country of the island of Java, of which Batavia is the capital.

JACCA, an ancient city of Arragon, capital of a district, situated on the river Arragon, 45 m. N by E of Saragossa. It includes near 200 towns and villages.

JACI DI AQUILA, a sea-port of Sicily, situated on the eastern coast, between Catania and Tavorinina. Lon. 15 26 E.

Jack Dyke, Yorks. SE of Barnard Castle. Jackman's Clyne, Isle of Wight, in W. Medina.

JACKSON'S BOROUGH, formerly called POUPON, a town of S. Carolina, 22 m. W of Charleston.

JACKSON, PORT, a large bay on the coast of New South Wales, about 12 m. N of Cape Banks, thought to be the finest harbour in the world. The capes, at its entrance, which is less than 2 m. across, are high perpendicular cliffs, and within it gradually expands into a noble basin, with soundings sufficient for the largest vessels, and space to accommodate, in perfect security, a greater number than ever were assembled at one station. Ships may lie in 5½ fathoms within 50 yards of the shore, and the channel (the surface of which is as smooth as a fish pond) has mostly 15 fathoms, gradually shoaling farther up. It runs chiefly in a western direction, about 13 m. into the country, and contains at least a hundred small coves, formed by narrow necks of land, the projections of which afford complete shelter from all winds. Sydney Cove lies on the S side of the harbour, between 5 and 6 m. from the entrance. There is an abundance of fish in the harbour, most of which are unknown in England, besides oysters, cockles, and other shell-fish.

Jacobstow, Cornw. 9 m. from Launceston.

Jacobstow, Devons. 3 m. from Hatherleigh.

JAEN, a district of Spain, extending 60 m. from N to S, and nearly as much from E to W. It was a kingdom in the time of the Moors, till annexed to the crown of Castile, and is now included in the government of Andalusia. It has La Mancha on the N, Cordova on the W, and Granada on the S; produces corn, wine, oil, excellent fruits, and very fine silk; and its mountains afford mines of lead, copper, and silver.

JAEN, a tolerably large city of Andalusia, capital of a province of the same name. It is situated on a small river, which soon after runs into the Guadalquiver, 36 m. N of Granada, and 45 E of Cordova. Lat. 37 53 N lon. 3 40 W.

JAEN DE BRACAMOROS, a government of S. America, in the audience of Quito, 330 m. NNE of Lima, containing some gold mines, which are abandoned. The climate is mild, and the soil produces all the necessaries of life in abundance. The culture of tobacco forms the principal business of the inhabitants. Rain is frequent. Its capital, of the same name, contains about 4000 inhab. among which are but few Spanish families.

JAFA, a country of Arabia, N of Aden, and W of Hadramant. It is fertile, and abounds particularly in coffee. It is governed by 3 sovereign princes or chiefs.

JAFFA, an ancient, decayed town of Asia, on the coast of Palestine, formerly called Joppa, 38 m. NW of Jerusalem. Lat. 31 45 N lon. 35 55 E. The inhabitants are Turks or Arabs, with a mixture of Greeks, Maronites, and Armenians. The houses are small, and surrounded with the ruins of the ancient walls and towers. The ancient harbour is destroyed, but there is a good road. Here pilgrims, &c. pay for permission to visit the Holy Land. The whole coast, from hence to Damietta, in Egypt, is entirely desert and wild, without a single port. The Turkish garrison of 4000 men, after surrendering to Buonaparte, in 1799, were all massacred.

JAFNAPATAN, a sea-port of Ceylon, at the N end of that island, and 100 m. N of Candy. The inhabitants export hence great quantities of tobacco, and some elephants, which are accounted the most docile of any in the world. Lat. 9 47 N lon. 80 45 E.

JAGARNAUT, a famous pagoda in the peninsula of Hindostan, and circar of Rajamundry. It lies on the Bay of Bengal, close to the shore, and a few miles to the E of the Lake Chilka. It is a shapeless mass of building, and no otherwise remarkable than as an excellent sea-mark for vessels sailing in the Bay of Bengal, and as one of the first objects of Hindoo veneration. Lat. 29 35 N lon. 85 40 E.

JAGERNDORF, or KORNOWITZ, a fortified town, capital of a province of Silesia, subject to Prussia. It is situated on the Oppa, 12 m. NW of Troppau, and 20 W of Ratibor.

JAGHIRE OF THE CARNATIC, a tract of land in the peninsula of Hindostan, subject to the English East-India company. It extends along the Bay of Bengal, from Madras to Lake Pullicate on the N to Alemparve on the S, and to Conjeveram on the W, being 108 m. along the shore, and 47 inland, in the widest part. The term Jaghire means a grant of land from the sovereign to a subject, revokable at pleasure, but generally a life-rent. It contains 2440 square miles, and its revenue is about 150,000*l.* per annum.

JAGO, ST. a large river of South America, in Peru. It falls into the S. Sea, about 150 m. NW of Quito, in lat. 1 20 N, after having watered a fertile country, abounding in cotton trees, palms, bamboos, &c.

JAGO, ST. one of the largest, most populous, best cultivated, and most fertile of the Cape de Verd Islands, on the coast of Africa. It lies about 6 leag. W of the Island of Mayo, and is about 60 m. in circumference. The people in general are black, or, at best, of a mixed colour, except a few of the better rank. Cotton is produced in such abundance in this island, that, besides the large quantities sent to the Brasils, and sold by the Portuguese to the other European nations, the natives are in general clothed with this manufacture. Here are vines, of which they make a wine, that is not contemptible; but as they are supplied with better by the European shipping, it has fallen into disrepute. The chief fruits of the island, besides a profusion of plantains, are citrons, lemons, oranges, musk, and watermelons; limes, bananas, guavas, pomegranates, pompions, quinces, custard apples, papas, tamarinds, pine-apples, cocoa-nuts, tar, apples, and sugar-canes. The animals are cows, horses, asses, mules, deer, goats, hogs, civet cats, and black-faced, well-proportioned monkeys, with long tails. Of the feathered kind, there are cocks, hens, ducks, Guinea hens, both tame and wild, parroquets, parrots, pigeons, turtle doves, crab catchers, curlews, and a great variety of others, valuable only for their plumage. They have also some cedar trees, and plenty of Indian corn. It is, in general, very high land; but were it not for the continual rains in the time of the travadoes, which render it unpleasant, and unwholesome to strangers, it would be as delightful an island as any in the world. The chief towns are St. Jago and Praya. Lat. 14 54 N lon. 23 30 W.

JAGO, ST. a sea-port town, capital of the Island of St. Jago, and of all the Cape de Verd Islands; the residence of the governor, and see of a bishop. It consists of about 300 houses, a church, and a convent, all built of rough stone, and greatly superior, in respect of architecture and circumstances of convenience, to those of the other islands. It stands dispersed upon the declivity of 2 hills, between which there is a deep valley, about 200 yards wide, towards the sea, but gradually decreasing in breadth as it retires from the shore, in a triangular form, the coast making the base. In this valley, close by the sea, there is a kind of street that runs parallel with the sea, across the valley, consisting of houses on both sides, that are watered by a rivulet which falls into a fine sandy bay, where the sea is constantly smooth and even as glass. This forms a convenient watering-place for ships, though the entrance be in a manner blocked up (except to good pilots) by a chain of rocks. Near the landing-place stands a small fort, almost level with the sea, in which is kept a constant guard, regularly relieved. On the very summit of the hill, behind the town, is another fort, well garrisoned, and mounted with heavy cannon. Besides the ships of other nations, which accidentally touch here, there are two Portuguese vessels which take it yearly in their way to Brasil. These vend among the inhabitants all kinds of European commodities, and take in exchange the principal manufacture of the island, striped cotton, which they sell again to good advantage in the Brasils. Besides this, one ship comes directly from Portugal to take in a cargo of sugar, in exchange for the manufactures of Europe.

JAGO, ST. a considerable town of S. America, capital of Chili, with a good harbour, and a royal audience. It is seated in a beautiful and fertile plain, on the river Mapocho, which runs across it from E to W. Here are several canals, and a dyke, by means of which they water the gardens and cool the streets. It is subject to earthquakes. Lat. 34 10 S lon. 71 5 W.

JAGO, ST. the most ancient town of Cuba, on the S. coast, with a noble and commodious harbour. It is seated at the bottom of a bay, on a river of the same name. Lat. 20 15 N lon. 76 40 W.

JAGO, ST. a town of Papayan; also a town of New Mexico, and province of New Leon.

JAGO DE LOS CAVALLEROS, a principal town of St. Domingo, seated on the river Yague, in a fertile soil, but bad air. Lat. 19 40 N lon. 71 20 W.

JAGO DEL ENTERO, ST. a town of Tucuman, S. America, the usual residence of the inquisitor of the province.

JAGO DE LAS VALLES, ST. a town of Mexico, seated on the river Panuco.

JAGO DE LA VEGA, ST., or SPANISH TOWN, a town of the island of Jamaica, where the assembly and the grand courts are held. It is seated in a pleasant valley, on the Rio Corbe, and was once a populous place, but is now reduced to a small compass. Being an inland place, its trade is small, but several wealthy people reside here, living in a gay manner. It is seated near the SE part of the island, about 7 m. NW of Port Passage, on the Bay of Port Royal. Lat. 18 6 N lon. 76 49 W.

JAGODNA, a town of Servia, seated on the river Moraw, 70 m. SE of Belgrade.

JAICZA, a town of Bosnia, in Turkey.

JAKUTSKOI. See YAKUTSK.

JAMAGOROD, a town in the government of Petersburgh, seated on the river Jama, 12 m. NE of Narva.

JAMAICA, an island of the W. Indies, discovered by Christopher Columbus, in 1494, 37 m. S of Cuba, and 50 W of St. Domingo. It is about 120 m. in length, and 42 where broadest. It is of an oval figure, and grows narrower from the middle, till it terminates in two points at the extremities of the island. It contains between 4 and 5,000,000 acres, and is divided by a ridge of hills, which runs nearly, from E to W, from sea to sea. Here abundance of fine rivers take their rise, and flow from both sides in gentle streams, refreshing the valleys as they glide along, and furnishing the inhabitants with sweet and cool water. They are well stored with excellent fish of various kinds, not known in Europe; and they have eels and crawfish in great plenty, not unlike ours. None of these rivers are navigable, even for barges; but some of them are so large, that the sugars are carried upon them in canoes from the remote plantations to the sea-side; others of them run under ground for a considerable space, particularly the Rio Corbe and the Rio Pedra. The mountains, and indeed the greatest part of the island, are covered with woods, which never lose their verdure, but look green at all times of the year; for here is a perennial spring. There are a thousand different kinds of trees adorning the brow of every hill, irregularly mixing their different branches, appearing in gay confusion, and forming groves, in cool retreats. Among these are the lignum vitæ, the cedar, and the mahogany trees. In the valleys are sugar-canes, and such a variety of fruit-trees, as to make the country look like a paradise. But to balance these advantages, there are dreadful alligators in the rivers; guinoes and galliwasps in the fens and marshes; and snakes and noxious animals in the mountains. The days and nights are almost of an equal length all the year round. There are two springs, or seasons, for planting grain, and the year is distinguished into two seasons, the wet and the dry. July, August, and September, are called the hurricane months, because then these dreadful tempests are most frequent, and there is lightning almost every night. Not above one half of the island is cultivated, all the plantations being by the sea-side. Here and there are savannas, or large plains, where the original natives used to plant their Indian corn, and which the Spaniards afterwards made use of for breeding their cattle; but these are now quite bare and barren. The houses are generally built low, being only one story, on account of the hurricanes and earthquakes; and the negroes live in huts made of reeds, which hold only two or three persons. The common drink is Madeira wine, or rum punch. The common bread, or that which serves for it, is plantains, yams, and cassava-roots. The yams are like potatoes, only coarser, and of much larger size. But in 1793 a great number of the bread-fruit trees were brought here from the island of Otaheite, by Captain Bligh, in the Providence frigate. The cinnamon-tree thrives here extremely well; the first of these trees seen in that part of the world were obtained out of a French ship captured by Admiral Rodney; this yielded seeds in abundance, and many plants have been raised from them, which prosper exceedingly in the cultivated parts of the island. Hogs are plentiful; and their mutton and lamb pretty good; but the servants generally feed upon Irish salt-beef, and the negroes have herrings and salt-fish. The current coin is all Spanish money. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimento, chocolate, and several kinds of woods and medicinal drugs. They have some tobacco, which is but indifferent, and used only by the negroes. They have no sorts of European grain; but they have Indian corn, Guinea corn, and pease of various kinds, but none like ours; with variety of roots. Fruits are in great plenty, such as Seville and China oranges, common and sweet lemons, shadocks, citrons, pomegranates, mammes, soursops, papas, pine-apples, star-apples, prickly pears, alicada pears, melons, pompions, guavas, and many other sorts. The common distempers are, fevers, fluxes, and the dry gripes. Jamaica is divided into 3 counties, Middlesex, Surry, and Cornwall, which contain 6 towns and 27 villages. The legislature consists of a governor appointed by the king; a council, and house of assembly. In 1787, the number of negroes amounted to about 250,000, the whites to 30,000, the freed negroes and people of colour to 10,000, and the Maroons (who have been since transported to Nova Scotia) to 1400. In the same year, the exports amounted, in the whole, to the sum of 2,136,442*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* sterling, at the current London prices, and the imports to the sum of 1,496,232*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* The principal town is Kingston; but St. Jago de la Vega, or Spanish Town, is the seat of government. In 1655, Jamaica was taken from the Spaniards by the English, under Penn and Venables.

JAMMA, or IMAM, a town of Nedsjed, in Arabia.

JAMBI, a sea-port and small kingdom on the eastern coast of the island of Sumatra. Here is an European settlement; and pepper is exported hence, with the best sort of canes. Lat. 0 59 S lon. 102 35 E.

JAMES ISLAND, an island of Africa, about 30 m. up the river Gambia, in the middle of the river, and 3 m. from its nearest shore. On this island, which is about a mile in circumference, the English have a considerable factory. Lat. 13 15 N lon. 16 0 W.

JANOWITZ, a town of Kaurzim, in Bohemia; and a town of Sandomirz, in Poland.

Janus, Cornw. near Tregony.

JAPAN ISLANDS, a large country of Asia, situated to the eastward of China, Corea, and Tartary. It consists of 3 large islands, the names of which are Niphon, or Hiphon, Ximo, and Xikoko, and several smaller ones. The whole empire is divided into 7 principal countries, which are subdivided into 70 provinces. It is the richest country in the world for gold, and the air and water are very good. It produces a great deal of rice, millet, wheat, and barley. Cedars are common, and so large that they are proper for the masts of ships, and columns for temples. Both their porcelain and Japan are much better than those articles are in China; they have also silk, skins, and red pearls, which are not in less esteem than the white. Their horses, though extremely small, are very beautiful, and highly valued; and they have an art of tempering steel beyond any other nation in the world. They have tea, of all sorts, much finer and better cured than that of China. The inhabitants are very ingenious, and their manners are, in many respects, diametrically opposite to those of the Europeans. Our common drinks are cold, and theirs are all hot; the Europeans uncover the head out of respect, and they the feet; we are fond of white teeth, and they of black; we get on horseback on the left side, and they on the right; and they have a language so peculiar, that it is understood by no other nation. The sciences are highly esteemed among them, and they have several schools at different places. Those they study most are arithmetic, rhetoric, poetry, history, and astronomy. Some of their schools at Meaco have each 3 or 4000 scholars. They treat the women with great severity, and punish adultery with death; yet a man may take as many wives as he pleases. The Japanese formerly carried on a trade with the neighbouring countries; but now all communication with others is forbidden, except the Chinese, Coreans, the country of Jedso, and with the Dutch. Formerly their emperors were also sovereign pontiffs, and in the minority of one of them, when they had civil wars, one of the competitors of the crown assumed the ecclesiastical government, retaining the ancient title of Dairo, or Emperor; while the other, who ruled in civil affairs, was called Cubo; and things have remained on the same footing to this day. The Dairo is, at present, the nominal emperor, and confers the dignity upon the other, as if he were his vassal. He resides at Meaco, and has no lands; but he has a right of selling titles and dignities; and the idolatrous priests make great contributions. He wears a black habit, and a cap upon his head. His feet must never touch the ground, nor must he ever be exposed to the rays of the sun. He never cuts his hair, nor his beard, nor his nails; and all his victuals must be drest in new vessels. When he goes abroad, he is carried by 14 men in a litter, surrounded with curtains, so that he may see, and not be seen. He has generally 12 wives, who have each a palace, with singing and dancing women for his diversion. He has also an unlimited number of concubines. His palace is adorned with 365 idols. The Cubo, however, is the real emperor, and bears an absolute dominion over all civil and military affairs throughout the empire. The Dairo, therefore, may be considered as only the high-priest, while the Cubo is upon the real monarch of Japan. The religion of the whole country is Paganism; but there are two different sects; one of which is subject to the most painful severities; the other abandons itself to the most voluptuous enjoyments. There were once a great number of Christians, proselytes to the Jesuit missionaries, in different parts of the empire; but, in 1622, they underwent great persecutions, insomuch that they were, at length, all rooted out. The cause of this was the opposition of the priests; the haughty behaviour of the Portuguese, they not allowing several wives; and the persuasions of the Dutch, who told them, that their emperor would become a slave to the Pope, and to the king of Spain. The emperor of Japan is monarch paramount, and all the petty kings are his vassals. His army generally consists of 100,000 foot, and 20,000 horse, exclusive of those maintained by his vassals. His ordinary revenue is immense. The palace of the emperor is at Jeddo, in the island of Niphon, and it is the capital of the whole. The only Europeans that trade with Japan are the Dutch; and whenever their ships arrive, they take away their guns, sails, and helms, and carry them on shore, till they are ready to return back. In the absence of the ships, the factors are shut up in a small house, and are not suffered so much as to have a lighted candle in their houses in the night-time. The merchandise which the Dutch carry to Japan are spices, sugar, silks, linen and woollen cloths, elephants' teeth, haberdashery wares, raw hides, drugs, and glasses of all sorts; for which they receive gold, silver, copper, iron, and steel; porcelain, japanned and lackered wares, furs, tea, precious stones, ambergris, and medicinal herbs. The Japanese have neither tables, beds, nor chairs, but they sit and lie on carpets and mats, in the manner of the Turks.

JAPARA, a town of Java, seated on a river of the same name, on the N coast, with a spacious harbour. It was the capital of a considerable kingdom, till the Dutch made themselves masters of it; and now they have a colony here, and a considerable trade. It is 200 m. E of Batavia. Lat. 6 35 S lon. 111 5 E.

JASSY, a well-fortified city of Turkey, the capital of Moldavia, and residence of the hospodar of that country, who is vassal of the grand signior. The inhabitants are chiefly Greeks. It is situated on a branch of the river Pruth, 200 m. E of Otchakov. Lat. 47 8 N lon. 27 35 E.

JATS, THE, once a powerful tribe in Hindostan, to whom all that now remains is the small territory of Bhurtpour, 45 m. W of Agra.

JAUER, a town of Silesia, capital of a mountainous principality of the same name, containing 12 towns, and some large and populous manufacturing villages. It is N of Bohemia, and W of the principalities of Lignitz and Schweidnitz. The earthen-ware is much esteemed. The town of Jauer is noted for a large square, surrounded by piazzas, and is 12 m. S of Lignitz, and 16 NW of Schweidnitz.

JAVA, an island in the Indian Ocean, generally known by the name of Great Java, to distinguish it from Bali, by some named the Lesser Java; and is upwards of 600 m. in length, and from 60 to 80 in breadth. The N coast has many commodious creeks, bays, harbours, and towns, with little islands near the shore. It formerly had as many petty kings as there were large towns; but now it has two kingdoms only; one of which is under the jurisdiction of the king of Mataram, and the other under the king of Bantam. The inhabitants are of a yellow complexion, have faces rather flat, short, coal-black hair, large eyebrows, and large cheeks, with small eyes. The men are very robust and strong-limbed; but the women are small. The men wear a piece of calico wrapt two or three times round their middle; and the women wear them from their arm-pits down to their knees; but all other parts are bare. Those living near the sea-side are generally Mahometans; but within land they are Gentoos, abstaining from flesh of all kinds. The coin is of lead. It is a fertile island, producing sugar and the various tropical fruits; and it has very high mountains. It has likewise impassable forests and wildernesses; but the N, between Batavia and Bantam, is a very populous country, full of rice-fields, and various sorts of wild and tame animals. Here also is plenty of salt, pepper, cassia wood useful for building, gum benzoin, &c. beside flowering trees and shrubs, and most sorts of fruits proper to the climate. They have also hogs, beeves, and sheep, with other tame creatures; and likewise fowl, both wild and tame, in great abundance, among which are beautiful parroquets, peacocks of an extraordinary size, Bantam fowls, &c. It contains every species of serpents, many of them of the most dangerous kind, being 20 feet long. In the rainy season the winged ants, as large as bees, are very troublesome. The moutouke, a white maggot the size of a silk-worm, is very destructive to all articles of wood-work; these the inhabitants roast, and reckon a very delicate dish. The greatest wonder of this island is the bohon upas, or poison-tree. In the woods are large tigers, rhinoceroses, and several other animals unknown in Europe; and in the rivers are crocodiles. The air is as temperate and healthy as any part of the East Indies. The rains, which begin in November, lay the low grounds under water, kill the insects, and continue till the return of May. It was mostly under the dominion of the Dutch; but taken by the British arms in 1811. Beside the native Javanese, here are Chinese, Malayans, Aboynese, Topasses, Bugasses, Timoreans, and many other people, brought from distant countries by the Dutch. Java lies to the SE of the island of Sumatra, from which it is only separated by the Straits of Sunda. The capital of this island is Batavia, and the chief commodities are the same as the produce of our other East-Indian possessions. Lat. 5 45 to 7 50 S lon. 104 20 to 114 15 E.

ICELAND, a large island to the N of Europe, about 600 m. in length, and 300 in breadth, but contains not more than 47,000 inhab. The chief towns are Reikevig, Isefiord, Oefiord, and Eskefiord. For two months together the sun never sets; and in the winter it never rises for the same space. The boiling fountains of Iceland, according to Mr. Hooker, are remarkable curiosities, rising in a jet often 90 feet in height, and not less than 50 in diameter. The middle of this island is mountainous, stony, and barren; but in some places there are excellent pastures, and the grass has a fine smell. The ice, which gets loose from the more northern country in May, brings with it a large quantity of wood, and several animals, such as foxes, wolves, and bears. Mount Hecla is the most noted mountain, and is a volcano, which sometimes throws out sulphureous torrents. Their houses are scattered about at a distance from each other, and many of them are deep in the ground, but they are mostly miserable huts, covered with skins. Many of the natives profess Christianity; but those that live at a distance are Pagans. Some of them are cloathed with skins of beasts. The exports are dried fish, salted mutton, beef, butter, train-oil, tallow, coarse and fine jackets of wadmal, woollen stockings and gloves, red wool, sheep-skins, sea-horse teeth, fox-tails of several colours, feathers, and quills. The imports are iron, horses' shoes, timber, meal, wine, brandy, tobacco, coarse linen, and domestic utensils. Their language is the old Runic, or Gothic, the vernacular tongue of the Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians, before it branched into the several dialects since spoken by the natives of these three kingdoms. In 1809, six seamen from an English letter of marque landed, and took the governor and whole Danish garrison prisoners. Lat. 63 15 to 67 15 N lon. 16 to 25 W.

JEDBURGH, a royal borough town of Roxburghs. situated almost in the centre of the county, on the banks of the Jed, and near its confluence with the Teviot, 34 m. SE of Edinburgh, and 11 from Kelso. It contains 3900 inhab. (including the environs, which belong to the parish) and is the seat of the law-courts for the county.

JEDDO, or YEDDO, the second capital of Japan, in the island of Niphon, where the Dairo, or nominal emperor, resides. The houses are built with earth, and boarded on the outside, to prevent the rain from destroying the walls. In every street is an iron gate, which is shut during the night, and a kind of custom-house, or magazine, to put merchandise in. It is 2 m. in length and 6 in breadth, and contains 1,000,000 inhab. A fire happened in 1658, which, in the space of 48 hours, burnt down 100,000 houses, and in which a great number of the inhabitants perished. The emperor's palace was reduced to ashes; but the whole is rebuilt. The royal palace is in the middle of the town, and is defended by walls, ditches, towers, and bastions. Where the emperor resides are three towers, nine stories high, each covered with plates of gold; and the hall of audience is supported by pillars of massy gold. Near the palace are several others, where the relations of the emperor live. The empress has a palace of her own, and there are 20 small ones for the concubines. Besides, all the vassal kings have each a palace in the city, with a handsome garden, and stables for 2000 horses. The generality of the houses are nothing but a ground floor, and the rooms are parted by folding-screens; so that they can make the rooms larger or smaller at pleasure. Jeddo is well-fortified, and is seated in a plain, at the bottom of an extensive gulf or bay; and the river, which crosses it, is divided into several canals. Lat. 35 46 N lon. 139 30 E.

JERSEY, an island in the English Channel, about 18 m. from the French coast, and 84 S of Portland in Dorsets. subject to the English. It is about 12 m. long and 6 broad, and is difficult of access, on account of the rocks and sands. It contains 12 parishes: the principal towns are St. Helier, in the S part of the island, and St. Aubin; and contains about 20,000 inhab. It lies extremely well for trade. It is well watered with rivulets, and is well stocked with fruit-trees. They have a noted manufacture for woollen stockings and caps The civil government is intrusted to a bailiff and 12 jurats, under a governor appointed by the crown. Their laws are mostly from the ducal customs of Normandy: the general language is French. Round towers have been erected on all the accessible parts of the coast since the year 1781, when a body of French, under the Baron de Rullecourt, effected a landing, but were all either killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. Jersey is an earldom in the Villiers family. Lat. 49 11 N lon. 2 10 W.

JERSEY, NEW, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the E by Hudson's River and the Atlantic Ocean; on the S by the Atlantic and the Bay of Delaware; on the W by Pennsylvania and the state of Delaware, from both which it is separated by the river of that name; and on the N by a line drawn from the mouth of Mahakkamak River, in lat. 41 24, to a point in Hudson's River, in lat. 41. It is about 161 m. long and 52 broad, divided into 13 counties, and contains 245,562 inhab. Its produce is much the same as that of the neighbouring states. The principal towns are Burlington, Amboy, Brunswick, and Trenton.

Jervistown, in Clare, Munster. Jergin's Town, in Kildare, Leinster, near Naas, 16 m. from Dublin.

JERUSALEM, an ancient and celebrated city of Asia, formerly capital of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, after David had conquered the Jebusites. It was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, and the Jews were led captive to Babylon. It was afterwards taken by the Romans, and ruined, together with the temple, 70 years after the birth of Christ, being one of the most remarkable sieges in history. The emperor Adrian built a new city, near the ruins of ancient Jerusalem. It was taken by the Persians in 614, and by the Saracens in 636. In 1099 it was retaken by the Crusaders, who founded a new kingdom, which lasted near 88 years, under 5 Latin kings, and 8 patriarchs in the church. Saladin, king of Egypt and Syria, obtained possession of it in 1187. The Turks drove away the Saracens in 1217, have kept possession of it ever since, and call it HELEODS, that is, the Holy City. It is now inhabited by Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christians. It stands on a high rock, with steep ascents upon every side, except to the N. It is almost surrounded with valleys, encompassed with mountains, so that it seems to stand in the middle of an amphitheatre. It is about 3 m. in circumference, and includes Mount Calvary, which was formerly without the walls. On this hill is erected a large structure, with a round nave, which has no light but what comes through the top, like the Pantheon at Rome. This is called the Church of the Holy Sepulchre; the chapel of which is cut out of the rock, and lamps are kept constantly burning in it. The Christian pilgrims flock here from various parts, and the inhabitants accommodate them with lodgings and provisions, which is their chief business; and a bashaw, with a guard of janizaries, always resides here, to protect them from the insults of the Arabs. Jerusalem is 112 m. SSW of Damascus, and 45 from the Mediterranean Sea. Lat. 31 55 N lon. 35 25 E.

IHOR, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Malacca.

JIDDA, a sea-port of Mecca, in Arabia Felix, with a considerable trade, being a sort of a mart between Egypt and India. The circumjacent country affords nothing but Taif almonds for an object of traffic; of these, the English, who are particularly favoured here, carry away about 500,000 weight a year, to India. It is situated in a barren, sandy district, without water (all their provisions being imported from Egypt), 170 m. S of Medina.

JIHON, a large river of Asia, which rises in the mountains of Little Thibet, passes through Bucharia and Charasm, and empties itself partly into the Caspian Sea, and partly into the Lake Aral.

JIONPOUR, a small city of Hindostan Proper, capital of a circar of the same name, in the district of Benares, 40 m. NW of Benares. It is seated on the river Goomty, and was, at one time, the seat of an empire. Chaja Jehan, vizier to Sultan Mahummed-Shah, during the minority of his son, Mamood-Shah, assumed the title of Sultan Shirki, or King of the East, took possession of Bahar, and fixed his residence at Jionpour, where he built the great musjud, or mausoleum, which is still remaining, for himself and family. The bridge over the Goomty is built of stone, and consists of 16 pointed arches. On the top of the bridge are shops on both sides, built of stone. It was built in 1467, upon such sound principles, as to have withstood, for such a length of time, the force of the stream, which, in the time of the rains, is very great. The inundations have been known to rise frequently over the bridge, insomuch that, in 1774, a whole brigade of the British army (that is, 10,000 men) passed over it in boats. Lat. 25 45 N lon. 82 55 E.

ILLE, a town in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, 10 m. W of Perpignan.

ILLE AND VILAINE, a depart. of France, bounded on the E by the depart. of the Mayenne, and on the S by the Lower Loire. It takes its name from two rivers, the Ille and Vilaine, which unite together at Rennes, the capital.

ILLER, a river of Germany, which rises in the S part of the bishopric of Augsburg, passes by Kempten, Memmingen, Kirchberg, &c. and falls into the Danube, 2 m. above Ulm.

Illington, Norf. 4 m. from Harling.

ILLINOIS, a lake of N. America, about 15 m. long and 2 wide. Lat. 40 35 N lon. 89 18 W. Also a large river, which rises near the SW end of Lake Michigan, or as some say, runs from Lake Illinois, and taking a SW course, falls into the Mississippi, in lat. 40 N. Between the Illinois and the Ohio, is the country of a noted Indian nation called the Illinois, containing a population of 12,282.

Illogan, St. Cornw. 3 m. N of Redruth.

ILLOK, a town of Sclavonia, situated on the Danube, 16 m. W of Peter Waradin.

ILMEN, a lake near the city of Novogorod, in Russia, about 48 m. long and 15 wide.

ILMENAU, a river of Westphalia, which passes by Oldenstadt, Lunenburg, &c. before it falls into the Elbe; and a town of Henneburg, in Franconia.

Ilmer, Bucks, between Tame and Aylesbury Vale. Ilmington, Warw. 3 m. NW of Shipton-upon-Stour.

ILMINSTER, a town of Somersets. containing 360 houses. It has a considerable manufactory of narrow cloths, and is situated on the river Ille, in a dirty bottom, among hills, 26 m. SW of Wells, and 167 W by S of London. Market on Sat.

Ilsfield, Hants, SE of Basingstoke. Ilsham, Sussex, S of Arundel. Ilsington, Devons. NW of Newton Bushel. Ilsington, Dorsets. near Piddleton.

ILSLEY, EAST, a town of Berks, seated in a pleasant valley, between two hills, and excellent downs for feeding sheep, 14 m. NW of Reading, and 53 W of London. Market on Wedn.

ILST, a town of W. Friesland, situated on or near the river Weymar, 5 m. SE of Bolswaert.

Ilton, Devons. on a creek, near Kingsbridge. Ilton, and its Park, Somers. NW of Ilminster. Ilton, in the parish of Masham, N. Riding of Yorks. Imber, Wilts, 4 m. from Warminster. Imberburn, Sussex, near E. Grinstead.

IMENSTADT, a town of Suabia, in Germany.

IMERITIA, or more properly IMIRETTA, a country of Asia, between the Black Sea and the Caspian, bounded on the S by Georgia, on the W by Mingrelia, on the N by Ossetia, and on the E by the Persian dominions. This country, properly speaking, is a part of Georgia. The late sovereign, the Czar Solomon, having forbidden the scandalous traffic of the noblemen in their peasants, offended the Turks so much, that he was driven from his throne and compelled to live like a wild man, for 16 years, in the woods and caverns of the mountains, till the Russians reinstated him in his dominions. The revenues arise from a contribution of the peasants in wine, grain, and cattle, and from the tribute of the neighbouring princes. Among the extraordinary sources of revenue, confiscations have a considerable share; but all this is insufficient for the subsistence of the prince; he usually travels from house to house, and is entertained by his vassals, never changing his quarters while they have the means of accommodating him. It will, of course, be understood, that the court of Imeritia is not remarkable for splendour, nor the prince's table sumptuously served. His usual fare consists of gom, (a species of millet, ground and boiled into a paste,) a piece of roasted meat, and some pressed caviare. These he eats with his fingers, forks and spoons being unknown in this country. At table he is frequently employed in judging causes, which he decides at his discretion, there being no law but his own will. He usually wears a coarse dress, of a brown colour, with a musket upon his shoulder; but, upon solemn occasions, he puts on a robe of rich gold brocade, and hangs round his neck a silver chain. He is distinguished from his subjects, by riding upon an ass, and by wearing boots. His civil ordinances are issued weekly, on the market day, by one of his servants, who ascends a tree, and with a loud voice proclaims the edict, which is communicated to the people, by each person, upon his return to the place of his abode. The inhabitants, estimated at about 20,000 families, are scattered over the country in small hamlets. They are less mixed with foreigners, and are accounted handsomer than the other Georgians. They are likewise more industrious: they send yearly considerable quantities of wine to the neighbouring parts of Georgia, in leathern bags, carried by horses; but they are without manufactures, very poor and miserable, and cruelly oppressed by their landlords. The Imeritians are of the Greek religion; but their patriarch, who is generally of the royal family, can seldom read or write. Cutais is the capital of the present prince, the Czar David.

Imley, Northamp. S of Brackley. Immingham, Linc. near the coast, NW of Grimsby.

IMOLA, a town of Romagna, in Italy.

Impington, 3 m. N of Cambridge. Ince, Chesh. 2 m. from Frodsham. Ince, Lancas. near Wigan; another near Altmouth. Inch, Wigton, Scotland, 5 m. from Port Patrick.

INCH, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeens. 10 m. NW of Inverury.

INCH BRAYSEK, a small island in Forfar, near Montrose, and has an excellent dry dock.

INCH CAILLOCK, or the Island of Old Women, in Loch Lomond, on which is the burial place of Buchanan.

INCHCOLM, a small island in the Frith of Forth, near the coast of Fife, but within the county of Edinburgh. Here are the fine ruins of a once celebrated monastery, founded in 1123, by Alexander I. in gratitude for his escape, when driven on the island in a violent tempest, where he was hospitably treated, for three days, by a hermit, who entertained him with the milk of his cow, and a few shell fish. It was of the order of St. Augustine, and dedicated to St. Columba. At present, some fowls that haunt the ancient tower, and the rabbits that lodge in the mouldering soil, have full possession of this neglected spot.

Inch Innan, 3 m. from Renfrew, on the road from Glasgow to Greenock.

Inchequin, or O'Quin's Island, in Cork, Munster, SW of Youghal. Inchigeelagh, in Cork, Munster. It is a small village, situated in the midst of mountains, near the Lakes, or Loughs Allua and Gouganbarra, 6 m. SW of Macroom, and 148 from Dublin. Inch, Isle, or Inis, Curcey, is properly a peninsula in Down, Ulster, 74 m. from Dublin.

INCHKEITH, a desolate little island, of Mid-Lothianshi. in the Frith of Forth, lying midway between the two ports of Leith and Kinghorn. Here is a ruinous fort. The shores of both this island and Inchcolm, are bold and rugged, exhibiting several deep caverns, shelving cliffs, and towering rocks. It is about a mile long; and on the W side are vast strata of coral and shells. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Marnock, the ruins of which are still to be seen here. It has 120 acres of arable land, 40 of brushwood, and 300 of moor.

INCHMARNOCK, a beautiful island, SW of the Isle of Bute, on the W coast of Scotland.

INCH MURRIN, the largest island in Loch Lomond, on which the duke of Montrose has a neat hunting seat.

InchTure, Perths-sh. on the banks of the Tay, 9 m. from Perth.

INDEN ROTUN, a town of Chinese Tartary, 420 m. ENE of Pekin, the capital of the Mantcheou Tartars, where they began to establish their empire over China.

INDIA, an extensive region in Asia, which lies between 66 and 108 deg. E lon. and 8 and 36 deg. N lat. Under this name is generally understood all the countries which lie S of Tartary, and extend from the eastern frontiers of Persia to the western coasts of China, divided into India within, and India without, the Ganges. The moderns have likewise included, under the denomination of the East Indies, the islands of Japan, with all the islands in the Eastern and Indian Oceans, nearly as far as New Holland and New Guinea. But the name of India is most frequently applied to that country only, which is distinguished in Asia, as well as in Europe, by the name of Hindostan. See HINDOSTAN.

INDIANA, a tract of country, situated on the Ohio, in the state of Virginia.

INDIES, WEST, the name given to a great number of islands in the Atlantic Ocean, which extend from the NW extremity of the Bahama Islands, off the coast of Florida, in lat. 27 45 N in a south-easterly direction, to the Island of Tobago, which is 120 m. from the coast of Terra Firma, in 11 deg. 30 min. N lat. They lie between 59 and 86 deg. W lon. Cuba being the most western, and Barbadoes the most eastern, of all these islands. When Christopher Columbus discovered them, in 1492, he considered them as part of those vast regions in Asia, comprehended under the general name of India, to reach which, by a course due W across the Atlantic Ocean, had been the grand object of his voyage; and this opinion was so general, that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of their agreement, granted to Columbus upon his return, gave them also the name of Indies. Even after the error, which gave rise to this opinion, was detected, and the true position of the New World was ascertained, the name has remained, and the appellation of the West Indies is still given to these islands, and that of Indians, to the inhabitants, not only of the islands, but of the two continents, of America. They are likewise called the Caribbee Islands, from the aborigines of the country; and the sea in which they lie, is sometimes called, by modern geographers, the Archipelago of the Caribbees. By the French, they are called the Greater and Lesser Antilles; the Greater comprehending Cuba, St. Domingo, Jamaica, and Porto Rico; and the Less, Aruba, Curaçoa, Bonair, Margaretta, and some others, near the coast of Terra Firma. Foreign geographers, however, are not agreed as to the meaning or application of the word, some applying it to the Caribbee Islands in general. Nautical men distinguish them, from the different courses taken by ships, into the Leeward and Windward Islands. The name of the Caribbees should properly be confined to the smaller islands, which lie between Porto Rico and Tobago. These were inhabited by the Caribbees, a hardy race of men, nowise resembling their feeble and timid neighbours in the larger islands. Even in later times, they have made a stout resistance in defence of the last territory (the Island of St. Vincent) which the rapacity of their invaders had left in their possession. The reader will find most of these islands treated of separately.

INDIANS of NORTH and SOUTH AMERICA, the original natives of these two vast continents. Of the manners of the North American Indians, the reader may have a general idea, by an account of those who inhabit the countries to the E of the river Mississippi. These consist of 28 different nations; the principal of which are the Cherokees, the Chicasaws, the Choctaws, the Creeks, the Delawares; the Six Nations, the Shawanese, the Hurons, the Illinois, &c. Allowing about 700 to a nation, or tribe, they will contain, in all, 20,000 people. The Indians are not born white; and take a great deal of pains to darken their complexion, by anointing themselves with grease, and lying in the sun. They also paint their faces, breasts, and shoulders of various colours, but generally red; and their features are neat, especially those of the women. They are of a middle stature, their limbs clean and straight, and scarcely any crooked or deformed person is to be found among them. In many parts of their bodies they tattoo themselves, or prick in gunpowder on the skin in very pretty figures. Some shave, or pluck the hair off their heads, except a patch about the crown, which is ornamented with beautiful feathers, beads, wampum, and such like baubles: and except the head and eye-brows, they pluck the hair with great diligence from all parts of the body. Their ears are pared and stretched in a thong down to their shoulders. They are wound round with wire, to expand them, and adorned with silver pendants, rings, and bells, which they likewise wear in their noses. Some of them will have a large feather through the cartilage of the nose; and those who can afford it, wear a collar of wampum, a silver breastplate, and bracelets on the arms and wrists. A bit of cloth about the middle, a shirt of the English make, on which they bestow innumerable broaches to adorn it, a sort of cloth boot and mockasoons, which are shoes of a make peculiar to the Indians, ornamented with porcupine quills, with a blanket or match-coat thrown over all, complete their dress at home; but when they go on expeditions, they leave their trinkets behind, and mere necessaries serve them. There is little difference between the dress of the men and women, excepting that a short petticoat, and the hair, which is exceedingly black and long, clubbed behind, distinguish some of the latter. They are such expert marksmen, that they will kill birds flying, fishes swimming, and wild beasts running. They are very intelligent people, quick of apprehension, sudden in execution, subtile in business, exquisite in invention, and industrious in action. They are of a very gentle and amiable disposition to those they think their friends, but as implacable in their enmity; their revenge being only completed by the entire destruction of their enemies. They are very hardy, bearing heat, cold, hunger, and thirst, in a surprising manner; and yet no people are more addicted to excess in eating and drinking, when it is conveniently in their power. Among the Indians all men are equal, personal qualities being most esteemed. No distinction of birth, no rank, renders any man capable of doing prejudice to the rights of private persons; and there is no pre-eminence from merit, which begets pride, and which makes others too sensible of their own inferiority. Though there is perhaps less delicacy of sentiment in the Indians than among us, there is, however, abundantly more probity, with far less ceremony, or equivocal compliments. Their public conferences show them to be men of genius; and they have, in a high degree, the talent of natural, or unstudied eloquence. They live dispersed in small villages, either in the woods, or on the banks of rivers, where they have little plantations of Indian corn and roots, not enough to supply their families half the year; and subsist the remainder of it by hunting, fishing, and fowling, and the fruits of the earth, which grow spontaneously in great plenty. Their huts are generally built of small logs, and covered with bark, each one having a chimney, and a door, on which they place a padlock. One of their towns, called Old Chelicothe, is built in form of a Kentucky station; that is, a parallelogram, or long square; and some of their houses are shingled. A long council-house extends the whole length of the town, where the chiefs of the nation frequently meet and consult of all matters of importance. Some huts are built by setting up a frame on forks, and placing bark against it; others of reeds, and surrounded with clay. The fire is in the middle of the wigwam, and the smoke passes through a little hole. They join reeds together by cords run through them, which serve them for tables and beds. They mostly lie upon skins of wild beasts, and sit on the ground. They have brass kettles and pots to boil their food. Gourds or calabashes, cut asunder, serve them for pails, cups, and dishes. The accounts of travellers, concerning their religion, are various. All agree, that they acknowledge one Supreme God. They adore the Great Spirit, and believe that his care is extended over them; and, that "he puts good into their hearts." They also believe in a future state; that after death they shall be removed to their friends, who have gone before them, to an elysium, or paradise. The Wyandotts, near Detroit, and some others, have embraced the Romish faith, introduced among them by missionaries. The Shawanese, Cherokees, Chicasaws, and some others, are little concerned about religion. They have their festivals, and other rejoicing days, on which they dance and sing in a ring, taking hands, having so painted and disguised themselves, that it is difficult to know any of them; and after enjoying this diversion for a while, they retire to the place where they have prepared a feast of fish, flesh, fowls, and fruits; to which all are invited, and entertained with their country-songs. They believe that there is great virtue in feasts for the sick. For this purpose, a young buck must be killed, and boiled, the friends and near neighbours of the patient invited, and having first thrown tobacco on the fire, and covered it up close, they all sit down in a ring, and raise a lamentable cry. They then uncover the fire, and kindle it up; and the head of the buck is first sent about, every one taking a bit, and giving a loud croak, in imitation of crows. They afterwards proceed to eat all the buck, making a most harmonious, melancholy song; in which strain their music is particularly excellent. As they approach their towns, when some of their people are lost in war, they make great lamentations for their dead; and their cries of woe are answered by those within. They bear their deceased friends long in remembrance, often visit their graves, and even deck out their putrid remains with their best skins and other finery. Some nations abhor adultery, do not approve of a plurality of wives, and are not guilty of theft; but there are other tribes that are not so scrupulous. Among the Chicasaws a husband may cut off the nose of his wife, if guilty of adultery; but men are allowed greater liberty. This nation despises a thief. Among the Cherokees they cut off the nose and ears of an adultress; afterward her husband gives her a discharge. Their form of marriage is short: the man, before witnesses, gives the bride a deer's foot, and she, in return, presents him with an ear of corn, as emblems of their several duties. The women are very slaves, in many instances, to the men; in others, they are upon an equal footing, deliberating in the public assemblies, and, in private life, enjoying the privilege of declaring their affection, or paying their addresses to those they love. They are charged with being revengeful; but this revenge is seldom executed, but in cases of murder and adultery; and, indeed, the murderer is generally delivered up to the friends of the deceased, to do as they please. When one kills another, the deceased's friend kills him, and so they continue avenging one another's death till much blood is shed; and at last the quarrel is ended by mutual presents. Sometimes a chief, when offended, breaks off with a party, settles at some distance, and then commences hostilities against his own people. When they take captives in war, they are exceedingly cruel, treating the unhappy prisoners in such a manner, that death would be preferable to life. They afterward give them plenty of food, load them with burdens, and when they arrive at their towns, they must run the gauntlet. In this, they exercise so much cruelty, that one would think it impossible they should survive their sufferings. Many are killed; but if one outlives this trial he is adopted into a family as a son, and treated with paternal kindness; and if he avoids their suspicions of going away, he is allowed the same privilege as their own people. But sometimes their prisoners are destined to be tortured to death, in order to satiate the revenge of their conquerors. While their lot is in suspense, the prisoners themselves appear altogether unconcerned about what may befal them. They talk, they eat, they sleep, as if there were no danger impending: when the fatal sentence is intimated to them, they receive it with an unaltered countenance, raise their death-song, and prepare to suffer like men. The victors assemble as to a solemn festival, resolved to put the fortitude of the captives to the utmost proof. A scene ensues, the bare description of which is enough to chill the heart with horror. The prisoners are tied naked to a stake, but so as to be at liberty to move round it. All present, men, women, and children, fall upon them with knives and other instruments; and such is their cruel ingenuity in torturing, that, by avoiding to touch the vital part, they often prolong the scene of anguish for several days. In spite of all their sufferings, the victims continue to chaunt their death-song with a firm voice, they boast of their own exploits, they insult their tormentors for their want of skill to avenge the death of their friends and relations, they warn them of the vengeance that awaits them on account of what they are now doing, and excite their ferocity by the most provoking reproaches and threats. To display undaunted fortitude in such dreadful situations, is the noblest triumph of a warrior; to avoid the trial by a voluntary death, or to shrink under it, is deemed cowardly and infamous. If any one betray symptoms of timidity, his tormentors often dispatch him at once, with contempt, as unworthy of being treated like a man. Animated by those ideas, they endure, without a groan, what it seems almost impossible that human nature should sustain. Weary, at length, of contending with men, whose constancy they cannot vanquish, some chief puts a period to their sufferings, by dispatching them with his dagger or his club. The people of S. America gratify their revenge in a manner somewhat different, but with the same unrelenting rancour. Their prisoners, after meeting, at their first entrance, with the same rough reception as among the N. Americans, are not only exempt from injury, but treated with the greatest apparent kindness, feasted and caressed. But, by a refinement of cruelty, while they seem studious to attach their captives to life, their doom is irrevocably fixed. On an appointed day, the victorious tribe assembles, the prisoner is brought forth with great solemnity, he meets his lot with undaunted firmness, and is dispatched with a single blow. The moment he falls, the women seize the body, and dress it for the feast. They besmear their children with the blood, in order to kindle in their bosoms a hatred of their enemies, and all join in feeding upon the flesh with amazing greediness and exultation. Wherever this practice prevails, captives never escape death; but they are not tortured with the same cruelty as among tribes which are less accustomed to such horrid feasts. The Indians of S. America, immediately under the Spanish government, although the most depressed order of men in the country which belonged to their ancestors, are now far from being treated with that rigour and cruelty which was laid to the charge of the first conquerors of that continent. They are no longer considered as slaves; on the contrary, they are reputed as freemen, and entitled to the privileges of subjects. A certain tax, or tribute, is indeed imposed upon them, and certain services required; but these are all under the due regulations of policy and humanity. The Indians who live in the principal towns, are entirely subject to the Spanish laws and magistrates; but, in their own villages, they are governed by caciques, some of whom are the descendants of their ancient lords; others are named by the Spanish viceroys. These regulate the petty affairs of the people under them, according to maxims of justice, transmitted to them by tradition from their ancestors. A portion of the annual tribute is destined for the salaries of the caciques and protectors; another part is appropriated to the payment of their tribute in years of famine, or when a particular district is afflicted by any extraordinary local calamity. Provision too is made, by various laws, that hospitals should be founded in every new settlement, for the reception of Indians. Such hospitals have accordingly been erected, both for the indigent and infirm, in Lima, Cusco, and Mexico, where the Indians are treated with tenderness and humanity. See ESKIMAUX, INDIES, WEST, PATAGONIA, and ST. VINCENT'S.

INDORE, a modern city of Hindostan, capital of a territory in the province of Malwa, subject to one of the Poonah Mahratta chiefs. It is 30 m. S of Ongien, and 290 SSW of Agra. Lat. 22 56 N lon. 76 11 E.

INDRAPORE, a town and factory of the Dutch, on the western coast of Sumatra, 100 m. NW of Bencoolen.

INDRE, a depart. of France, bounded by that of Cher on the E, and Vienne on the W. It has its name from a river which rises in the depart. of the Creuse, and passing through this depart. and that of Indre and Loire, falls into the Loire below Chinon, or at Rigny, between Saumur and Tours. Chateauroux is the capital.

INDRE AND LOIRE, a depart. of France, lying to the NW of the depart. of Indre. Tours is the capital.

INDUS, a great river of Hindostan, called by the natives Sinde, or Sindeh. It is formed of about ten principal streams, which descend from the Persian and Tartarian mountains; but, according to major Rennell, the sources of these streams must be far more remote than the sides of these mountains. From the city of Attock, in about lat. 32 27 downward to Moultan, to the conflux of the Jenaub, or Chunaub, it is commonly named the river of Attock. Below the city of Moultan, it proceeds, in a SW direction, through the province of that name, and that of Sinde, enters the Western Indian Ocean by several mouths, NW of the Gulf of Cutch. It is a fine, deep, and navigable river, for vessels of any burden; the different branches are also most of them navigable to a great extent; its mouth, however, is so choaked up with sand, that no ship can enter it.

Ingham, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Ingarsby, Leicest. near Bilsdon. Ingate, Suff. near Beccles.

INGATESTONE, a town in Essex, on the road from London to Harwich. It consists of one street, and is 6 m. SW of Chelmsford, and 23 NE of London. Market on Wedn.

INGOLDSTADT, a strong town of Bavaria, with a university founded in 1472, seated on the Danube, in the midst of a morass, 5 m. NE of Newberg, and 38 N by W of Munich. Lat. 48 46 N. lon. 11 10 E.

Ingram, Northumb. W of Alnwick.

INGRIA, a province of the Russian empire, which now forms the government of St. Petersburgh. It is bounded on the N by the river Neva and the Gulf of Finland; on the E and S by the government of Novogorod and that of Pleskow; and on the W by the Gulf of Finland and the governments of Esthonia and Riga. It is about 150 m. long and 50 broad. The Czar Peter the Great wrested it from the Swedes, and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nystadt, in 1721. At that time, the inhabitants of the flat country were a Finnish people, but little different from the Fins of Carelia, as to their language and manners. They were called Ischortzi, from the river Ischora, which runs into the Neva. Ingria did not retain its ancient Swedish privileges; on the contrary, Peter made a present of one part of the Ischortzi to certain Russian nobles; who, on their side, were obliged to people the less cultivated cantons of Ingria, with colonies of Russians from their estates; and thence it is, that we often see a village of Russians surrounded by villages of Fins. Before the conquest of this country, the Ingrians had Lutheran preachers for every canton; but numbers of them have since conformed to the profession of the Greek faith. The country abounds with various wild animals, particularly rein deer.

Ings, Westm. 5 m. NW of Kendal. Ingst, Gloucest. a hamlet in Olveston parish. Ingthorp, Rutl. in Tinwel parish.

INGUSHI. See KISTI.

Ingworth, Norf. 2 m. W of Alesham.

INISTIOGE, a town of Kilkenny, in Leinster, 63 m. from Dublin.

Inkbarrow, Worcest. 4 m. W of Aulcester. Inkersell, Derbys. near Bolsover. Inkpen, Berks, near Newbury. Inkslip, Lancas. S of Garstang. Inkstone, Heref. on the Wye, N of Ross.

INN, a river of Germany, which rises in the country of the Grisons, about 12 m. SW of Zuls, runs in a NE course through Tyrol and Bavaria (passing by Inspruck, Ratenburg, Kuffstein, Brenau, and other towns), and falls into the Danube near Passaw. Also a river of the archduchy of Austria, which runs into the Danube near Efferding.

INNACORDA, a fortress of Hindostan, in the Guntoor Circar, subject to the Nizam of the Deccan. It is 87 m. SSE of Hydrabad.

Innerkeithing, a village of the county of Peebles, on the N side of the river Tweed, near which is an excellent medicinal spring, rising into celebrity.

Innisbosin, an island on the W coast of Mayo, Connaught, 3 leag. from the main land. Iniscarra, in Cork, Munster. Inniscloghran, an island in Lough Ree, in the river Shannon, between West Meath and Roscommon. Innisfallen, an island in the Lake of Killarney, containing about 12 acres, agreeably wooded.

INNISHANNON, a town of Cork, in Munster, seated on the river Bandon (which is navigable to Collier's Quay, half a mile below the town), 6 m. from Kinsale, and 134 from Dublin. The linen manufacture has commenced here.

INNISKERRY, an island near the coast of the county of Clare, a little to the N of Dunmore Bay.

INNISKILLING. See ENNISKILLEN.

Inniskirkan, an island between Cape Clear Island and Baltimore Bay, in Cork, Munster. Inniskeane, in Cork, Munster, 144 m. from Dublin. It is a small village, with a good weekly market.

Innislounagh, in Waterford, Munster. Innis Murra Island, off the coast of Sligo, in Connaught. Innistory, i. e. The High Island, 8 m. from the NW coast of Donegal, Ulster. Innisturk, an island contiguous to that of Innis Clare, at the entrance of Clew Bay, on the coast of Mayo, Connaught. Innistymond, in Clare, Munster, 118 m. from Dublin.

INNTHAL, a district of Tyrol, watered by the Inn. Inspruck is the capital.

Inny River, in Kerry, Munster.

INOWILADISLOW, or INQWLOCZAW, a town of Wladislaw, in Poland.

INSPRUCK, a town of the Tyrol, seated in a pleasant valley, on the river Inn, 60 m. S of Munich. It has extensive suburbs, in which are some considerable palaces, churches, and convents; and contains 12,000 inhab. Lat. 47 16 N lon. 11 27 E.

INSTADT. See PASSAU.

Instow, Devons. near Biddeford, at the conflux of the Taw and Towridge. Inswork, Devons. a peninsula at Milbrook Townsend. Intwood, S of Norwich.

Inver, in Donegal, Ulster.

INVERARY, a royal borough town in Argyles. containing upwards of 2000 inhab. Here are manufactures of linen and woollen, as also considerable works for smelting iron by means of charcoal. One ship belonging to the town is engaged in foreign trade, and about half a dozen are employed in imports of meal, coals, merchant goods, &c. exporting wool, timber, and oak bark. It is seated on the NW side of Loch Fyne, near which is a castle, the seat of the Duke of Argyle, 75 m. NW of Edinburgh, and 45 NW of Glasgow.

Inverarity, Forfars. 3 m. from Dundee. Inveraven, on the banks of the Avon, partly in Elgin and partly in Banffs. Inverchaol-ain, Argyles. 9 m. from Greenock, across the Clyde.

INVERBERVIE. See BERVIE.

Inveresk, a village of Edinburghs. seated on the E side of the mouth of the river Esk, near the Frith of Forth, 4 m. E of Edinburgh. Inverkeilor, Angus, Scotland, 6 m. from Aberbrothwick, on the banks of the Lunan.

INVERKEITHING, a royal borough town of Fifes. situated in a bay of the Frith of Forth, 18 m. NW of Edinburgh. Before the entrance of the harbour, there is a large and safe bay, which affords excellent shelter for ships in all winds. On the W side of the harbour is a large Dutch-built vessel, used as a lazaretto. Here are two commodious quays, for the landing and receiving of goods; and great improvements have been lately made to accommodate the shipping still further. Several ships belong to this place, but none of any considerable burden. Some of them sail to foreign parts, and the rest are chiefly employed in the coal and coasting trade. Sometimes, between 40 and 50 vessels wait here for coals, especially in the winter season.

Inverkeithney, Banffs. Scotland, on the banks of the Deveron, 12 m. from Banff.

INVERLOCHY, an ancient burgh in Inverness. near Fort William, a castle, formerly belonging to the thanes of Lochaber.

INVERNESS, a populous flourishing town of Scotland, capital of a county of the same name, pleasantly situated on the S bank of the river Ness, and overlooking the Frith of Murray, 50 m. NE of Fort William, and 106 NNW of Edinburgh. It contains 1672 houses, and 10,757 inhab. It has a safe and convenient harbour, and a good deal of shipping. Several large buildings have been erected on the N side of the town, in which a considerable manufactory of ropes and canvas is carried on. It is a royal burgh, holding its first charter from Malcolm Canmore. Over the river Ness is a handsome bridge of seven arches. The salmon fishery in this river is very considerable, and is let to some fishmongers of London. A little to the W of this town, is the remarkable vitrified fort, called Craig Phadrick; the stones composing its walls appear to have been partly melted by fire. Lat. 57 30 N lon. 4 3 W.

INVERNESS, the most extensive county of Scotland, bounded on the W by the ocean; on the N by Ross-shire; on the E by the counties of Nairne, Murray, Aberdeen, and Perth; and on the S by those of Perth and Argyle. Its extent from N to S is about 45 m.; and from E to W 75. The northern part is very mountainous and barren. The woody mountains are the haunts of stags and roes. The capercailzie is also seen sometimes among the lofty pines; the heath is possessed by wild fowl; and the lofty summits by ptarmigans and Alpine hares. It contains 14,646 houses, and 78,336 inhab. This county has several considerable lakes; being divided, in a manner, into two equal parts, by Loch Ness, Loch Oich, Loch Lochy, and Loch Eil; all which might be united by a canal, that would form a communication between the two seas. The trout lakes in this county are seldom or never known to freeze; much less are the arms of the sea, even in the most northern parts of Scotland, subject to be frozen in the hardest seasons; while the Texel, and many bays and great rivers in Holland and Germany, are covered with ice. The southern part of the shire is also very mountainous, and is supposed to be the most elevated ground in Scotland. The extensive plains which surround the lakes, are in general fertile; and the high grounds feed many sheep and black battle, the rearing and selling of which is the chief trade of the inhabitants. Limestone, iron ore, and some traces of different minerals have been found in this country, with beautiful rock-crystals of various tints; but no mines have been worked hitherto with much success. The principal river is the Spey; but there are many others of inferior note, as the Ness, Fyers, Glass, Lochy, &c. The people in the high parts of the country, and on the western shore, speak Gaelic or Erse, but the people of fashion in Inverness and its neighbourhood, use the English language, and pronounce it with propriety.

INVERURY, a small town of Aberdeens. situated on the confluence of the rivers Don and Ury, over which it has an elegant bridge, 15 m. NW of Aberdeen.

Inwardleigh, Devons. 3 m. from Hatherleigh. Inworth, Essex, 4 m. from Witham.

Inzaeres, Dorsets. in Burton parish, near the river Bridy.

JONES, a town of N. Carolina, situated on the N side of the Roanoke river, opposite Halifax.

Jonesborough, in Armagh, Ulster.

JONES TOWN, a town of Pennsylvania.

JONKIOPING, or JORTERKOPING, a town of Sweden, capital of the province of Smoland, and seat of the superior court of justice for Gothland. The houses are chiefly of wood, covered with turf; for, excepting the largest towns and country seats, few of the buildings in Sweden are roofed with tiles. They are principally covered with turf or moss; no thatching being used, as both too dear, and too dangerous in case of fire. In order to keep out the rain, large layers of birch bark are spread over the timber-work of the roof, and covered with turf or moss. These turf roofs make a singular appearance, many of them producing herbage, which is occasionally cut for the use of the cattle; and a few are ornamented with flowers. The town contains about 3000 inhab. and has a manufacture of arms. It is seated on the S side of the Lake Wetter, 50 m. NW of Calmar. Lat. 57 48 N lon. 14 7 E.

IPSALA, a town of Romania.

IPSERA, and ANTI IPSERA, small islands in the Archipelago, NW of Scio.

Ipsley, Warwicks. near Studley. Ipston, in Turfield parish, partly in Bucks and partly in Oxfords. Ipstones, Staffords. near the river Churnet, a mile below Kingsley. The soil here noted for producing the best ruddle, or red-lire, for marking sheep.

IPSWICH, an ancient, irregularly-built town, of Suffolk, seated on the river Orwell, near the place where the fresh and salt water meet, forming a sort of half-moon, or crescent, on its bank, 18 m. NE of Colchester, and 69 NE of London. Across the river there is a bridge, leading to the suburb of Stoke. It contains 2733 houses, and 13,670 inhab. Here are several public buildings, and a custom-house, with a good quay. It has declined, however, from its former consequence; the manufactures of broad cloth and canvass are at an end; and its present commerce chiefly depends upon the malting and exportation of corn to London, and timber to the different dock yards. It has a considerable coasting trade, and a small share of foreign commerce, and has lately sent ships to Greenland. Vessels of great burthen are obliged to stop at some distance below the town. The market has been lately built on a very extensive and handsome scale. Here is also a new theatre. Markets on Tues. and Thurs. for small meat, on Wedn. and Frid. for fish, and on Sat. for provisions of all kinds.

IPSWICH, a town of Massachusetts, situated on a river of the same name, near the sea, 22 m. N of Boston. The harbour is inconvenient, on account of a bar and shoals. Also a town of New Hampshire.

IQUIQUE, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Peru. It is about a mile in circumference, and is inhabited by a few Indians and slaves, who are principally employed in collecting a yellow earth, formed by the dung of birds, and manure for vines, and with which 8 or 10 vessels have been annually loaded for about a century past. Lat. 20 20 S.

IRABATTEY, a name given to the river Ava, in some part of its course.

IRAC, IRAC ARABIA, or BABYLONIAN IRAC (the ancient CHALDEA), is a country of Asia, watered by the rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and so called from the Desert of Arabia, which lies to the W of it. The NE parts are fertile, with a number of cities and towns; but towards the SW it is a dreary wilderness. It is mostly under the dominion of the Turks. Bagdad and Bassorah are the principal places.

IRAC AGEMI, or PERSIAN IRAC, a province of Persia, is bounded by Ghilan and Mezanderan on the N, Farsistan and Cushistan on the S, Chorasan on the E, and on the W by the Arabian Irac. It is about 150 leagues in length, and 120 in breadth. The air is healthy, but the climate hot, and it hardly ever rains in the summer, for 6 months together. The country is generally barren, although there are vast and fertile plains near the rivers. Musk, manna, galbanum, and grapes, of which they make white wine, are its principal productions. They reckon about 40 cities or towns. Ispahan is the capital.

IRBIL, supposed to be the ancient ARBELA, a fortress of Asiatic Turkey, in Curdistan, 80 m. SE of Betlis.

Irby, Chesh. in the parish of Thurstaston. Irby, Lanc. near Kirby Lonsdale. Irby, Linc. E of Spilsby. Irch, a river in Caernarvons. which runs into the Irish Channel at Pulhely. Irchester, Northamp. 2 m. from Wellingborough. Irchenfield, Heref. on the E side of the Golden Vale. Ireby, in the parish of Tatham, Lanc. 2 m. from Hornby.

IREBY, an ancient town of Cumberland, between Cockermouth and Wigton, 299 m. from London, and 10 from Cockermouth. Market on Thurs.

IREKEN, JERKIN, or YARKAN, a rich, populous, and large town, of Kaschgar, or Little Bucharia, where the Grand Khan of the Eluth Tartars principally resides. The town is well built of bricks, dried in the sun, and the palace of the khan is large, but not handsome. The environs are fertile. It is the staple town of the trade carried on between the Indies and the N part of Asia; and is 90 m. SE of Kaschgar. Lat. 39 6 N lon. 79 5 E.

IRELAND, one of the British islands, lying to the W of that of Great Britain. It is bounded on the E by St. George's Channel, or the Irish Sea, which separates it from England and Wales; on the NE by a channel about 20 m. broad, which separates it from Scotland; and on every other side by the ocean. It lies between lon. 5 43 and 10 38 W, and between lat. 51 15 and 55 13 N, being about 287 m. in length, and 155 in breadth. It is divided into 4 provinces, viz. Ulster on the N, Munster on the S, Leinster on the E, and Connaught on the W. These are subdivided into 32 counties, viz. Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's County, Longford, Louth, Meath, Queen's County, West Meath, Wexford, Wicklow, in the province of Leinster. Antrim, Armagh, Cavan, Down, Donegal, Fermanagh, Londonderry, Monaghan, and Tyrone, in the province of Ulster. Clare, Cork, Kerry, Limerick, Tipperary, and Waterford, in the province of Munster. Galway, Leitrim, Mayo, Roscommon, and Sligo, in the province of Connaught. The air is mild and temperate, being cooler in summer, and warmer in winter, than in England; though it is not so clear and pure, nor so proper for ripening corn and fruits. It is more humid than in England; but this quality is pretty much mended, and will be more so, when the bogs and morasses are drained. In general it is a fruitful country, well watered with lakes and rivers, and the soil, in most parts, is very good and fertile; even in those places where the bogs and morasses have been drained, there is good meadow ground. It produces corn, hemp, and flax, in great plenty; and the herds of cattle are so numerous, that their beef and butter are exported into foreign parts: the English, and foreign ships, frequently come to victual in Irish ports. The principal riches and commodities of Ireland are cattle, hides, wool, tallow, suet, butter, cheese, wood, salt, honey, wax, furs, hemp, and more especially fine linen cloth, which they have brought to great perfection, and their trade in it is vastly increased. This country is exceedingly well situated for foreign trade, and has many secure and commodious bays, creeks, and harbours, especially on the W coast. Their laws differ but little from those of England; and the national establishment of religion is the same. Ireland furnishes 100 members to the British parliament, since the union with England in 1801. Formerly, this kingdom was entirely subordinate to that of Great Britain, whose parliament could make laws to bind the people of Ireland; and an appeal might be made from their courts of justice to the house of lords in England. The lord-lieutenant of Ireland, as well as the council, are appointed, from time to time, by the king. The native Irish are described as impatient of abuse and injury, quick of apprehension, implacable in resentment, ardent in all their affections, and remarkably hospitable. In the country there certainly remains a great deal of this amiable national characteristic, and even in their towns formality and etiquette are often so lost in hearty salutations, and a familiar manner of address, that the stranger soon feels himself at home, and imagines the people about him all relations. There are some considerable mountains in Ireland, the chief of which are the Knock Patrick, Slieu Bloomy, and Curlieu Hills. Of all its bogs, that called the Bog of Allen is the most considerable. The chief lakes are Lough Lean, Lough Erne, Lough Neagh, and Lough Coribb; and its principal rivers are the Shannon, Boyne, Barrow, Liffey, Nore, and Suir. The kingdom is said to have been formerly full of woods, but the case is now so different, that it has been found necessary to plant new ones, and to give parliamentary encouragement for their preservation and increase. The mineral productions of this country have been little known till of late years, the natives in general having given themselves (at least for some centuries past) little trouble about them. Nevertheless, copper, lead, iron, and even silver ores, have been found in the Irish mines: some vestiges of works of this sort appear at Clontarf, on the edge of Dublin Bay. In the county of Antrim, there is a mine which consists of a mixture of silver and lead, every 30lb. of lead ore producing about a pound of silver. There is another in Connaught, of the same kind; and one still richer in Wicklow. About 12 miles from Limerick, two mines have been discovered, one of copper, and the other of lead. Iron mines are dispersed all over the kingdom. There are likewise quarries of marble, slate, and freestone, and the earth produces, in various places, coal and turf for firing. Its capital city is Dublin.

IRELAND, one of the Bermuda islands.

IRELAND, NEW, a large island in the S. Atlantic Ocean, N of New Britain. The most southerly point, Cape George, is in lat. 4 59 S lon. 152 7 E. See NEW BRITAIN.

Ireton Kirk, Derbys. SW of Wirksworth. Ireton, Little, Derbys. NE of Kedleston. Ireford Abbey, Linc. NE of Market Raisin.

IRGISKOE, a town of Russia, in the government of Saratov, situated on the Irgis, 96 m. E of Yolsk.

IRISH CHANNEL, or ST. GEORGE'S CHANNEL, that part of the Atlantic Ocean which is between the coast of Ireland and Great Britain.

Irish Town, between Dublin and the sea.

IRK, a river in Lancas. which runs into the Irwell, near Manchester.

IRKUTSK, a town of Russia, capital of a government to which it gives name. It is the see of a Greek bishop, and a place of considerable commerce, the caravans which trade to China passing through it. It is situated on the river Angora, near its confluence with the Irkut, near the Lake Baikal, 140 m. ESE of Kolivan.

IRKUTSKOI, the largest, but least peopled, government of Russia, comprising all the eastern parts of Siberia, from the Northern Ocean to the frontiers of Chinese Tartary, and from the boundaries of the governments of Tobolsk and Kolivan on the W, to the Eastern Ocean. This large territory was gradually conquered, and appropriated by the Russians, in their desultory excursions from Tobolsk, and is now divided into the four provinces of Irkutsk, Nertchinsk, Yakutsk, and Okotsk, from the four principal towns.

Irmingland, Norf. NW of Alesham.

Irnham, Linc. near Corby, pleasantly situated, with good water, and in a wholesome air.

Iron Acton, Glouc. 3 m. from Bristol, at the conflux of the Stoure and Laden, which form the river Frome. Much iron has formerly been dug up in this parish, and many iron-works, and great heaps of cinders, are still to be seen here. It has a coal-work now carrying on. In the church-yard is one of the crosses, arched over, from whence the priests used to harangue the people on particular holidays.

IRONGRAY, a town of Kirkcudbrightsh. 16 m. E of Kirkcudbright.

IRON MOUNTAINS, mountains of N. America, which divide the Tennassee government from N. Carolina. Lat. 35 25 N lon. 83 0 W.

IRPIN, a river of Russian Poland, which runs into the Dnieper, above Kiov.

IRROMANGO, an island of the New Hebrides, in the S. Sea, nearly 80 m. in circuit. Lat. 18 48 S lon. 169 20 E.

IRONAM, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Sea, near Tanna.

Irsted, Norf. SW of Hickling, 10 m. from Norwich. Irt, a river of Cumb. which runs into the Irish Channel below Carlton, not far from Ravenglass. In it are found the muscles, that breed a sort of pearl, vulgarly called shell-berries. Irthing, a river of Cumb. which runs into the Eden, about 2 m. E of Carlisle. Irthingborough, Northamptons. 2 m. from Higham Ferrers. Irthington, Cumb. on the river Irthing, near Brampton. Irton, or Irton-dale, Cumb. SE of Egremont.

IRTYSH, a large river in Siberia, which rises in Tartary, and running from the S to the NW falls into the Oby, about 200 m. N by E of Tobolsk. The NW shore is low pasture ground; on the other side, is a prodigious number of black bears, wolves, and red and grey foxes, beside the best grey squirrels in all Siberia. This river abounds with fish, particularly sturgeon, and delicate salmon.

IRVINE, or IRWIN, a sea-port of Ayrs. seated on a river of the same name, which separates the counties of Ayr and Lanerk, near its influx into the Clyde, 15 m. E of the Isle of Arran, and 26 SW of Glasgow. It contains 694 houses, and 5750 inhab. In 1790, there were 51 vessels belonging to this port, the largest of which was 160 tons, and the smallest of 33. About 24,000 chaldrons of coals are exported annually to Ireland; as also considerable quantities of woollen goods, carpeting, muslins, lawns, and linen; the principal imports are hemp, iron, deals, ship-timber, and corn, from Memel, Norway, &c.

Irwell, a river of Lancas. which rises above Bolton, flows thence to Manchester, and falls into the Mersey below Flixton, about 7 m. above Warrington. Irton, a river in Brecknocks. which runs into the Wye at Builth.

ISABELLA FORT, on the river Scheldt, opposite Antwerp; also a fort in Dutch Flanders, near Sluys.

ISABELLA, St. the largest of the Isles of Solomon, in the S. Sea. It was discovered by the Spaniards in the year 1568. Also a town on the N coast of the island of St. Domingo, built by Christopher Columbus, in the year 1495. Lon. 71 20 W.

Isbury, Berks, near Lambourn. Isby Walton, Leicest. near Castle Donnington.

ISCHIA, an island of Naples, about 10 m. in circuit, and lying 8 or 10 m. W of the city of Naples. It is full of agreeable valleys, which produce excellent fruits; mountains, on which grow vines of an exquisite kind; rivers, and fine gardens. It abounds in game, has several hot springs, and is much resorted to by invalids, on account of its healthy air.

ISCHIA, a town of Naples, capital of an island of the same name. It stands upon a rock, which is joined to the island by a strong bridge; the rock is about 7 furlongs in circumference, and the city is like a pyramid of houses piled one upon another, which makes a very singular and striking appearance. At the end of the bridge are iron gates, which open into a subterraneous passage, through which they enter the city. Lat. 40 41 N lon. 14 2 E.

Iscoed, Flints. Wales, 8 m. from Whitchurch.

ISENACH. See EISNACH.

ISENARTS, or EISENARTS, a considerable town of Stiria, famous for its iron-mines, 30 m. NW of Gratz.

ISENBURG, a town of Mark, Westphalia; a town in the circle of the Lower Rhine, situated on the Iser, with a castle on a sharp rock, built by Charlemagne, 10 m. N of Coblentz; and a town of Isenburgh, circle of Upper Rhine, 3 m. S of Frankfort on the Maine.

ISENBURG, UPPER, a county in the Wetterau, Upper Rhine, about 30 m. long and 10 wide; divided among several branches of the house of Isenburgh.

ISENBURG, LOWER, a county in the Lower Rhine, formerly governed by counts of its own; but now (except a small part possessed by the counts of Wied-Runkel, and the barons of Walderdorf) included in the electorate of Treves.

ISENGHEIN, a town of the late Austrian Netherlands, seated on the river Mandeira, 5 m. from Courtray.

ISER, a pretty large river of Germany, which rises in the Tyrolese, about 5 m. N from Inspruck, and having passed by Munich, Landshut, Landau, &c. falls into the Danube, about 2 m. below Deckendorf.

ISERE, a depart. of France, a part of the ci-devant Dauphiny, and so called from a river which rises in the depart. of Mont Blanc, and passing through the middle of this depart. by the towns of Monsteir, Montmelian, Grenoble, &c. falls into the Rhone, about 3 m. N of Valence. This river is navigable for boats as far as Montmelian. Grenoble is the principal town.

ISERNIA, a town of Moliso, in Naples.

Iseton on the Isle, Durh. SW of Bishop Auckland. Isey, Wilts, N of the Thames, near Cricklade. Isgar, Northumb. in the manor of Felton. Isham, Northamp. 4 m. from Wellingborough.

ISIGNI, a town in the depart. of Calvados, with a small harbour, 15 m. W of Bayeux; also a town in the depart. of the Channel, 9 m. SSE of Avranches.

Isker, or Isis, a river in Brecknocks. which runs into the Usk, at Aberisker.

ISIS, a name frequently given to the river Thame, before it joins the Thames at Dorchester. See THAMES.

Isis Partis, in the E part of the parish of Penrith, in Cumb. on the N bank of the Eamont. Here are two caverns, or grottos, dug out of the solid rock, sufficient to contain 100 men. The passage to them is very narrow and dangerous; and, perhaps, its perilous access may have given it its present name; though the vulgar tell strange stories of one Isis, a giant who lived here in former times, and, like the Cacus of fabulous antiquity, used to seize men and cattle, and draw them into his den, to devour them. But it is highly probable, that these subterraneous chambers were made for a secure retreat in time of sudden danger; and the iron gates, which were taken away not long ago, confirm this supposition.

ISLANDS, BAY OF, a bay of New Zealand, on the NE coast of the northern of the two islands that go under that name.

ISLAY, or ILA, one of the Western Isles of Scotland, to the SW of Jura, from which it is separated by a narrow strait or sound. Its greatest length is 25 m. its breadth about 18. The principal village is Bowmore, which is in a manner a new town, and has a convenient harbour. The inhabitants are between 7 and 8000. The face of the country is hilly. Here are mines of copper, emery, quicksilver, lead ore, and black lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand, for manure. Some corn and flax is raised here, and numerous droves of cattle are annually exported. In this, and some of the neighbouring islands, multitudes of adders infest the heath. On the NW. side of the island is the cave of Sanegmore, which is a grotto, divided into a number of far-winding passages, sometimes opening into fine expanses; again closing, for a long space, into galleries, and forming a curious subterraneous labyrinth. There are also many other caverns, the haunts of numerous wild pigeons, that lodge and breed in them. The goats that feed among the rocks are so wild, that they are shot like deer.

Isle, Shrops. 2 m. from Shrewsbury, is a peninsula formed by the Severn, where those floats, called Coracles, are much used. They are of a form almost oval, and made of split, sallow twigs, interwoven, the part under water covered with a horse's hide. Only one man can sit in them, who rows very swiftly with one hand, while, with the other, he manages his fishing tackle. A coracle is about 5 feet long and 3 broad, round at the bottom, and so light, that the fishermen carry them on their backs to and from the water.

ISLE ADAM, a town in the depart. of Seine and Oise, seated on the river Oise, 6 m. NNE of Pontoise.

Isle Alonga, see Annalong, Isle of.

ISLE OF BEEVES, an island in the Bay of Campeachy, 17 m. in length and 8 in breadth. It abounds in cattle and excellent fruits. Lat. 18 30 N lon. 91 30 W.

Isle of Dogs, Midd. a part of Poplar Marsh, so named by the seamen in passing it, when the kings had a palace at Greenwich, and the royal hounds were kenneled here.

ISLE DE DIEU, or D'YEU, an island on the coast of France, about 7 m. long and 2 wide. It is 15 m. SSW of Noirmoutier. Lat. 46 45 N lon. 2 15 W.

ISLE DE FRANCE. See FRANCE, ISLE OF.

ISLE JOURDAIN, a town in the depart. of Gera, in an island of the little river Save, 8 m. N of Lombez; also a town in the depart. of the Vienne.

ISLE ROUSSE, a town of Corsica.

ISLE AND VILAINE, a depart. of France, having the English Channel and the depart. of the Channel on the N, and the depart. of the Lower Loire on the S. Rennes is the capital.

ISLEBEN. See EISLEBEN.

ISLEWORTH, a town in Middlesex, 9 m. W of London. It is situated on the river Thames, opposite to Richmond.

Isley, Cornw. SW of Padstow. Islington, Norf. near Lynn Marsh. Islington, a large village 1 m. to the N of London, being almost a continuation of the metropolis. On the NW is the new village of Pentonville, to which it is likewise united. The New River, which is a great ornament to this place, is received, at the SW end of it, into a large reservoir, called the New River Head, whence its water is conveyed in pipes to all parts of the metropolis. The parish is very extensive, including the hamlets of Upper and Lower Holloway, Kingsland Green, and three sides of Newington Green, and contains 2400 houses, and 15,000 inhab. being an increase of 800 houses since 1801. Near the New River Head is a noted spring of chalybeate water, called New Tunbridge Wells. Islip, Northamp. near Thrapston.

ISLIP, a town of Oxf. chiefly noted for the birth and baptism of Edward the Confessor. The chapel wherein Edward was baptized, at a small distance N from the church, was desecrated during Cromwell's usurpation, and converted to the meanest uses of a farm-yard. It is built of stone, 15 yards long and 7 broad, and retains traces of the arches of an oblong window at the E end. At present it has a roof of thatch, and is still called the king's chapel. The manor was given by Edward the Confessor to Westminster Abbey, to which it still belongs. It has also some remains of an ancient palace, said to have been king Ethelred's. By the Oxfordshire canal, it communicates with all the late inland navigations. It has a good market for sheep, and is 36 m. NW of London.

ISMAIL, a town of Bessarabia. It was taken by storm by the Russians, under general Suwarrow, on the 22d of December, 1790; and it is said, that the long siege and the capture did not cost less than 10,000 men. The most atrocious part of the transaction is, that the garrison (whose firmness would have received, from a less sanguinary foe, the highest applause) were massacred by the merciless conquerors, to the amount of, by their own account, 30,000 men, and the place was abandoned to the fury of the brutal soldiery. Ismail is seated on the N side of the Danube, 140 m. SW of Ockzakow. Lat. 45 11 N lon. 29 30 E.

ISMID, or IS NIKMID. See NICOMEDIA.

ISNIC, a town of Natolia, the see of a Greek archbishop, yet containing scarcely 300 houses. It is the ancient Nice, famous for the first general council held here in 325, and which promulgated the Nicene Creed as an article of faith. There is now nothing remaining of its ancient splendour but an aqueduct. Silk forms the principal article of trade among the inhabitants, who are mostly Jews. It is seated in a fertile country, on a lake which abounds with fish, and communicates with the Sea of Marmora, 60 m. SE of Constantinople.

ISNY, an imperial town of the Algau, in Suabia, with a famous abbey of Benedictine monks. It is seated on the river Isny, 40 m. S of Ulm.

ISOLA, a sea-port of Calabria Ultra; and a town of Terra di Lavora, both in Naples; also a town of Istria; and a river of the Tyrolese, which runs into the Drave near Leintz.

ISONA, a town of Catalonia.

ISPAHAN, a celebrated city of Asia, capital of Persia, seated in the province of Irak-Agemi, and reckoned the finest city in the East. It stands in the middle of a plain, surrounded on all sides by mountains, at 8 m. distance, which rise gradually in the form of an amphitheatre. There is no river, except a small one, called Zenderoud, which supplies almost all the houses with water, and over which are several fine bridges. It is nearly of an oval form, with well-built houses, and flat roofs, on which they walk, eat, and even sleep in the summer time, for the sake of the cool air. The walls are built of mud, and about 20 m. in compass, but being kept in no repair, and hidden by the adjoining houses and gardens, they have but a mean appearance, and are hardly to be discovered. The Meidan Shah, or Royal Square, is 440 paces long and 160 broad, surrounded by a canal, built with bricks, cemented by a black mortar, which, in time, becomes harder than freestone. Here are a great number of magnificent palaces; and that of the king is one of the most spacious in the world, being 5 m. in circumference; its great portico stands in the royal square, and is built with porphyry, and very high. There are 260 mosques, among which the royal mosque, at the S end of the square, is adorned with an inconceivable profusion of gold, azure, and other ornaments; many of the figures, decorations, &c. on its portico, being wrought in a manner unknown to our European architects; 1800 large caravanseras, above 260 public baths, a prodigious number of coffee-houses, and some very fine streets, in which are canals, planted with trees; though, generally speaking, the other streets are narrow, crooked, and not paved; they are, however, more free from dirt and dust than many great cities in Europe, as the air here is very dry, and every housekeeper waters the street before his own door twice a day. The inhabitants were formerly computed at 1,000,000; but, from intestine broils and civil wars, this kingdom has been almost torn to pieces, by which the principal towns are greatly depopulated. There are 3 large suburbs; that called Joisa, is inhabited by Armenians; Hasenbath, by Georgians; and Kebrabath, by Pagans. Though it is at a distance from the sea, it carries on a great trade, the people of several nations resorting there for the sake of traffic. It is 265 m. NE of Busserah, 300 S of the Caspian Sea, and 1400 SE of Constantinople. Lat. 32 25 N lon. 52 55 E.

ISSEL, or YSSEL, and ISSEL, or YSSEL, THE LITTLE, two rivers of the United Provinces. The former rises in Westphalia, passes by Doesburg, Zutphen, Deventer, &c. and falls into the Zuyder Zee, by two mouths, a little below Campen; the latter waters Ysselstein, Montford, Gonda, &c. and falls into the Maese, 2 m. above Rotterdam.

ISSEL, OLD, a river which rises in the N part of the duchy of Cleves, and runs into the Issel at Doesburg.

Issells, St. Pembrokes. Wales, 3 m. from Tenby.

ISSELSTEIN, or YSSELSTEIN, a town of Utrecht, with a small territory, seated on the Issel, 5 m. S of Utrecht.

ISSEQUIBO, a flourishing settlement of Guaiana, S. America, contiguous to that of Demerary, and 8 or 10 m. W of the town of Surinam. It is seated on the river Issequibo, which is about 3 leag. wide at its mouth, and runs into the Atlantic in lat. 6 45 N and lon. 63 20 W. Its principal productions are sugar, coffee, and cotton. It was twice taken by the English, in 1781, but restored by the treaty of peace in 1783; and since the commencement of the present war; it still remains in their possession.

Isserkelly, in Galway, Connaught.

ISSOIRE, an ancient town in the depart. of Puy-de-Dome, near which are found amethysts of as beautiful a colour as those of the East, but not so hard. Issoire is seated on the river Couze, near the Allier, 15 m. SSE of Clermont.

ISSOUDUN, a town in the depart. of Indre, seated on the river Theols, 17 m. SW of Bourges, and 135 nearly S of Paris, containing about 10,000 inhab. Its trade is in wool and cattle; and it has considerable manufactories of cloth, hats, and stockings.

IS SUR TILLE, a town in the depart. of Côte d'Or, situated on the river Tille, 9 m. N of Dijon.

Isthwith, a river in Cardigans. which runs into the Irish Sea, at or near Aberystwith.

Isting Ebourn, Sussex, NW of Midhurst.

Istrad, a river in Denbighs. which runs into the Clwyd, below Whitchurch.

ISTRIA, a peninsula of Italy, lying on the N part of the Adriatic, by which it is in a manner surrounded, except towards the N, where it is joined to Carniola. It was anciently a part of Illyrium, and was conquered by the Romans, between the first and second Punic wars. In the middle ages it belonged to the patriarch of Aquilea; and in the year 1190, most of the maritime part was conquered by the republic of Venice, though not without interruption from the Austrians. It is hilly, and the air is unhealthy, especially near the coast; but the soil produces plenty of wine, oil, and pastures; there are also quarries of fine marble. That part of it which lately belonged to the Venetians, is now mostly annexed to the house of Austria. Capo d'Istria was the capital.

Iswick, Lancas. in Amounderness, N of Kirkham.

Isygarreg, in the parish of Cemmes, Montgomerys. 4 m. from Machyleth.

ITALY, one of the finest and most celebrated countries of Europe, extending from NW to SE nearly 700 m. On the N and NW it is bounded by France, Switzerland, and Germany; on the E by Carniola and the Adriatic; and on the S, SW, and W by the Mediterranean; its figure bearing some resemblance to that of a boot. It was formerly the seat of the Roman empire; and, afterwards, of that more singular usurpation, the dominion of the pope; for this ecclesiastical monarch, under the modest title of minister ministrorum, servant of servants, claimed a right to dispose not only of the affairs of such nations as acknowledged his supremacy; but also of pagan lands to the ends of the earth; bestowing them, as an inheritance, on the royal supporters of his church. Italy is divided into a great number of states, which differ much in extent and importance. Between the confines of France and Switzerland, on the W and N are the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia, namely, Piedmont, Montserrat, and part of the Milanese. To the NE are the ci-devant territories of Venice, now mostly reduced to the obedience of the emperor. S of these are the late Italian dominions of the emperor, namely, part of the Milanese, and the Mantuan, now formed into an independent republic, under the protection of France. S of these are Modena, Mirandola, and Reggio, lately belonging to the duke of Modena, but now incorporated with the new republic. W of these are the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, whose sovereign is of the house of Bourbon. S of Parma lies the republic of Genoa, and SE of this, that of Lucca. Hence extends, along the coast of the Mediterranean, the grand duchy of Tuscany. The Ecclesiastical State, or territory of the Pope, lies principally to the E and SE of Tuscany, between the Gulf of Venice and the Mediterranean; and the remainder of Italy, which occupies the whole southern extremity, is the kingdom of Naples, with its dependent islands, of which Sicily is the principal. The air of Italy is very different, according to the different situations of the countries it contains. In those on the NE side of the Apennines, it is temperate; but on the SW it is very warm. The air of the Campania of Rome, and of the Ferrarese, is said to be unwholesome; which is owing to the land not being duly cultivated, nor the marshes drained. That of the other parts is generally pure, dry, and healthy. In summer the heat is very great in the kingdom of Naples, and would be almost intolerable, if it were not alleviated by the sea breezes. The principal rivers are the Po, Tiber, Arno, Adige, and Var; and there are several fine lakes, as the Maggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, Perugia, Braccianno, and Celano. As there are a number of rivers in Italy, beside those mentioned above, the soil, in general, is very fertile. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe; excellent silk in abundance; corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, innumerable mulberry-trees, figs, peaches, nectarines, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chesnuts, &c. Most of these fruits were at first imported by the Romans from Asia Minor, Greece, Africa, and Syria, and were not the natural products of the soil. This country also yields good pasture, and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, buffaloes, wild boars, mules, and horses. The forests are well stored with game; and the mountains yield not only mines of iron, alum, sulphur, marble of all sorts, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c. but also gold and silver; with a great variety of aromatic herbs, trees, shrubs, and evergreens, as thyme, lavender, laurel, wild olive-trees, tamarinds, junipers, oaks, and pines. Wine, oil, perfumes, fruits, and silks, are the principal articles of exportation; and great sums of money are expended by travellers in the purchase of pictures, curiosities, relics, antiquities, &c. The Italians have been the most celebrated of all the moderns for their genius and taste in architecture, painting, carving, and music, and several of them have also been eminent as writers. The women affect yellow hair, as did formerly their predecessors, the ladies of ancient Rome; they also use paints and washes for their hands and faces. The Italian language is a corruption of the Latin, and is said to be spoken best at Florence.

Itchel, Hants, near Alderston. Itchenor, Sussex, 4 m. from Chichester. Itchen, or Alre, a river of Hants, which rises at Chilton Candover, in the centre of the county, and thence running SW waters the city of Winchester, where it begins to be navigable; from Winchester its course is directly S till it enters the bay of Southampton, at the town of that name. Itching, or Irthing, a river of Northumb. and Cumb. falling into the Eden near Warwick. Itching Abbots, Hants, 3 m. NW of Alresford. Itchingfield, Sussex, 2 m. from Horsham. Itching Stoke, Hants, E of Itching Abbots. Itchingswell, in the parish of Kingsclose, Hants.

ITCHINGTON BISHOP'S, a town of Warwicks, so called from the bishops of Lichfield and Coventry, once its possessors. It is situated on the river Ichene, 4 m. to the NE of Kineton. This was anciently one of the chief towns in the county; and, in the reign of Henry II. was ranked with the boroughs that were to contribute to the marriage of the king's daughter. Market on Wednes.

Itchington, Long and Nether, Warw. near Southam. Itchington, in the parish of Tytherington, Glouces. 2 m. from Wickwar. Itenfield, Cumb. near Inglewood Forest.

ITHON, a river in Radnors. which runs into the Wye, near Dissart, about 3 m. N of Builth.

Itteringham, Norf. 2½ m. NW of Alesham. Itton, Monmouths. W of Chepstow.

ITZEHOE, a town of Danish Holstein, built originally by count Egbert, in pursuance of an order, in the year 809, from the emperor, Charles the Great, as a fortress against the Danes. It is seated on the river Stoer, 8 m. NNE of Gluckstadt.

JUAN DE FRONTERA, St. a town of S. America, in Peru, in the district of Chiquitos. It lies to the E of the Andes, 98 m. NE of St. Jago.

JUAN DE PUERTO RICO, St. an island of the W. Indies, 50 m. E of St. Domingo, and called by the English Porto Rico. It is 100 m. in length, and 50 in breadth, and is subject to the Spaniards. It is full of very high mountains, and extremely fertile valleys, interspersed with woods, and well watered with springs and rivulets. Its meadows are very rich, and there are so many cattle, imported originally from Old Spain, that they often kill them for the sake of their skins alone. The woods are stored with parrots, wild pigeons, and other fowl. European poultry is found here in plenty, and their coasts afford abundance of fish. The N part of the island, which is the most barren, is said to contain various mines of silver and gold. The principal trade of the natives consists in their sugar, rum, ginger, corn, hides, and cotton, both raw and manufactured, cassia, mastic, salt, oranges, lemons, sweetmeats, and other fruits, partly proper to the climate, and partly introduced from Spain. A breed of dogs, which the Spaniards originally brought over, for the purpose of hunting and tearing in pieces the defenceless inhabitants, are said to live here wild in the woods, near the sea shore, and subsist upon land rats, that burrow in the earth. This island was discovered by Columbus, in 1493. The air is healthy, but it is subject to storms and hurricanes, like the rest of these islands. The capital, of the same name, is seated in the peninsula, on the N coast of the island, with a good harbour, defended by a citadel and castle. It is populous and well built, the see of a bishop, and residence of a governor. It was founded in the year 1514. In 1594, when it was in a very flourishing state, it was attacked by sir Francis Drake, who destroyed all the ships in the harbour, but could make no further progress into the island. In the year 1597, it was taken and plundered by the earl of Cumberland. Lat. 18 29 N lon. 67 4 W.

JUAN FERNANDEZ, an island in the S. Sea, about 12 m. long and 6 wide. It is 330 m. W of the coast of Chili, parallel with St. Jago. It is uninhabited, but having a good harbour on the N coast, called Cumberland Bay, it is found extremely convenient to touch at and water. Lat. 33 40 S lon. 83 W.

JUAN DE ULLOA, St. an island in the Gulf of Mexico, half a mile NE of Vera Cruz.

JUCATAN, or YUCATAN, a large peninsula of Mexico, nearly opposite the W end of the island of Cuba. It has the Gulf of Honduras to the E, and the Bay of Campeachy to the W, and contains a great quantity of timber proper for building of ships; as also sugar, cassia, indigo, cotton, and Indian corn. The original inhabitants are very few, they having formerly been very ill used by the Spaniards. It is a flat, level country, and is unhealthy in some parts, which may be owing to the frequent inundations. Merida is the capital; but some give that appellation to the town of Campeachy. See HONDURAS.

JUDENBURG, a town of Stiria, situated on the river Muhr. The public buildings, with the square, are magnificent.

JUDOIGNE, or GELDENACKEN, a town of the late Austrian Brabant, situated on the Geete, 12 m. SSE of Louvain.

Ive, St. Cornw. W of Kellington. Ivedon, Devons. in Aulescomb parish. Ivegill, in the parish of Dalston, Cumb. 4 m. from Carlisle. Iver, Bucks, 3 m. from Uxbridge. Ivey Church, Kent, by Romney Marsh.

IVES, ST. a sea-port and borough of Cornwall, seated on a bay of the same name, with about 30 ships belonging to its harbour, 8 m. NE of Penzance, and 277 W by S of London. It is in the parish of Unylelant. It trades largely in pilchards and Cornish slates. Markets on Wednes. and Sat.

IVES, ST. a town of Hunts, with the largest market in England for cattle, except that of Smithfield. It is an ancient, large, and handsome place, seated on the river Ouse, over which it has a fine stone bridge, 6 m. nearly E of Huntingdon, and 59 N of London. Market on Mond.

Ives, St. Cornw. 5 m. from Callington.

JUGON, a town in the depart. of the North Coast, containing about 700 inhab.

IVIGA, an island of the Mediterranean, about 15 m. long, and 12 wide, subject to Spain. It is mountainous, but fertile in corn, wine, and fruits; and remarkable for the great quantity of salt made in it. It is 50 m. SW of Majorca. The capital is of the same name, seated on a bay, with a good harbour. Lat. 39 30 N lon. 1 25 E.

IVIL, or IVEL, a river in Bedf. which runs into the Ouse at Tensford.

IVIL, a river in Somersets. which runs into the Parrot, near Langport.

IVINGO, a town in Bucks, with a manufacture of lace, 6 m. SW of Dunstable, and contains 200 houses. Market on Mond.

Ivington, Heref. 2½ m. from Leominster.

JULIAN, ST. a harbour on the coast of Patagonia. Lat. 49 10 S lon. 68 44 W.

Julian's, St. Monm. near Caerleon.

Julian's Town, Meath, Leinster.

JULIEN, ST. a town in the depart. of Upper Vienne, 13 m. NW of Limoges.

JULIEN, ST. a town in the respective departs. of the Jura, Coté d'Or, Mont Blanc, Higher Alps, Upper Loire, Rhone and Loire, Vienne, Sarne and Loire, Calvados, Upper Garonne, Var, Drome, Ain, and Loire.

JULIEN, ST. DU SAULT, a town in the depart. of the Yonne, seated on or near the river Yonne, 10½ m. S of Sens.

JULIERS, a duchy of Westphalia, situated between the Rhine and the Maese, and bounded by the duchy of Guelders on the N, and by the electorate of Cologne and the Rhine on the E. The principal towns are Juliers, the capital, a small, but strong town, with a regular citadel, a church, and a convent, within the walls, and a Calvinist and a Lutheran church without, situated on the Ruhr, 22 m. W of Cologne, in lat. 50 57 N and lon. 6 23 E, Dueren, Aix la Chapelle, Munster Eyssel, and Euszkirchen. It is subject to the elector palatine, is about 68 m. in length, and 30 in breadth, contains 26 towns, and 11 freedoms and boroughs, and is remarkable for the great quantity of woad it produces.

Julliott, St. Cornw. 4 m. from Camelford.

JULPHA, OLD, once the capital of Armenia, in Asia, now in ruins, the inhabitants having been transplanted to a suburb of Ispahan, called New Julpha, where they have several churches. They were brought thither for the sake of trade.

JUMIEGE, a town in the depart. of Lower Seine, with a late celebrated Benedictine abbey. It is seated on the river Seine, 12 m. WSW of Rouen.

JUMNA, a large river of Hindostan, which rises in Thibet, waters the cities of Delhi, Agra, &c. and runs into the Ganges at Allahabad.

Jump, Yorks. near Rotheram.

JUNAGUR, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in the county of Guzerat, 170 m. SW of Amedabad.

JUNCULAM, a town of the island of Java, situated on the SW coast, 55 m. SSW of Batavia.

JUNKSEILON, an island in the Bay of Bengal, near the SW coast of Siam, nearly 60 m. long, and from 10 to 20 wide. Near the principal town (of the same name, situated in the N part of the island, with a secure harbour for small vessels) is a mine of loadstone, but the pieces do not preserve their virtue above 4 or 5 months. Lat. 8 56 N lon. 98 30 E.

IVORY COAST, a country of Africa, on the coast of the Atlantic, between Cape Appolonia and Cape Palmas. It contains several towns which are situated at the mouths of rivers, called by the same name. The chief commodities are gold, ivory, and slaves; the former in the greatest plenty. Whatever the Gold Coast produces, is also found here in greater abundance and perfection; and indeed, the fruits and vegetables of the warmer climates seem all to be united on the Ivory Coast. The interior country, however, is but little known, as the natives refuse the Europeans leave to build settlements, or even trade among them, except by means of the coast negroes. The inhabitants are reckoned the most savage and barbarous on the whole coast, and some writers scruple not to call them anthropophagi.

Ivory Lodge, Hants, in New Forest.

JURA, one of the western isles of Scotland, NE of the isle of Islay, on the coast of Argyleshi. It is about 25 m. long, and from 2 to 6 broad. Some parts of the southern and western sides are fertile, and there are only three mountains on the whole island. These are of a conical form, of a stupendous height, and are called the Paps of Jura. The rest of the island is flat, and generally covered with heath. Shell fish and potatoes form the principal food of the poorer people. A few wild roes are still seen here, but their number is continually growing less.

JURA, a depart. of France, having Switzerland to the E, the depart. of Saone and Loire to the W, and the Upper Saone on the N. It contains mines of iron of a superior quality, mines of copper and lead, and many quarries of black marble, of jasper of different colours, and of alabaster. It takes its name from Mount Jura. Lons le Saunier is the capital.

JURA, MOUNT, a chain of mountains, which extend, nearly in a line, from the Rhine, near Basil, to the Rhone, 10 m. below Geneva; sometimes more, sometimes less elevated, and in different places taking different names.

Jurby Point, a cape on the NW part of the Isle of Man.

IVREA, a town of Canavez, in Piedmont, containing besides the cathedral, 3 parish churches, and several religious houses. It is defended by a castle and two other fortresses, and is situated on the Grand Doria river, 20 m. N of Turin.

IVRY, a town in the depart. of Eure, with a late Benedictine abbey, situated on the river Eure, 10 m. N by W of Dreux; also a town in the depart. of Coté d'Or; and a town in the depart. of Paris, 3 m. S of Paris.

Just, St. Cornw. at the Land's End, 6 m. NW of Penzance. Just, St. Cornw. ½ m. from St. Maws, in which parish that borough is situated. Just Castle, St. Cornw. on Falmouth Haven.

JUTLAND, a large peninsula of Denmark, bounded on the S by the duchy of Holstein; and on the other sides by the German Ocean and Baltic Sea. It is about 200 m. in length from N to S, and 95 in breadth from E to W. The air is very cold, but wholesome, and the soil is fertile in corn and pastures, which feed a great number of horses, beeves, and hogs, which are sent to Germany, Holland, &c. Hence Jutland is commonly called the land of bacon and rye bread. This was anciently called the Cimbrica Chersonesus; and is supposed to be the country whence the Anglo Saxons came that conquered England. It is divided into two parts, called N. and S. Jutland: the latter being the duchy of Sleswick. N. Jutland is composed of four general governments, each of which had its bishop and general governor. They derive their name from the four chief cities, Aalborg, Wiborg, Aarhuys, and Ripen.

Ivy Bridge, Devons. a village remarkable for its rural and picturesque scenery. It is considerably increased of late in its buildings, and is seated on the rapid and noisy river Aune, on the road between Exeter and Plymouth, 11 m. NE of the latter. It is situated in 4 parishes, viz. Ugborough, Ermington, Harford, and Cornwall. Ivy Church, Wilts, 2 m. from Salisbury. Ivythorn, Somersets. W of Glastonbury. Iwade, Kent, near Milton and Sittingbourn. Iwade, Kent, 7 m. from Chatham. Iwerne Courtnay, or Shroton, Dorsets. 3½ m. from Blandford. Iwerne Minster, Dorsets. 4 m. from Blandford. Ixning, Suffolk, near Newmarket.

IXAR, a town of Arragon, in Spain.

IXWORTH, a town in Suffolk, situated on the road between Bury and Yarmouth, 7 m. NE of Bury, and 78 NE of London. Market on Frid.

Ixworthorp, Suffolk, NW of Ixworth.

JYENAGUR, a country of Hindostan, lying to the S of the Mewat, in the eastern quarter of Agimere, and subject to one of the rajpoot princes.

JYEPOUR, a city of Hindostan, in the territory of Jyenagur. It was built by the celebrated rajah Jessing, who also erected an observatory here, and invited Claude Boudier to it, in 1734. Wendal represents Jyepour as a place of great wealth and consequence in 1779, being the staple of the principal part of the goods that are brought from every quarter of India. It is 104 m. W by S of Agra, and 70 ENE of Agimere.

IZDOGAS, a town in the province of Hascora, Morocco.

IZQUINTENANGO, a town of Chiapa, in Mexico.

KABER, Westm. in the parish of Kirby Steven.

KACHAO, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Kumbo, situated on the river San Domingo, about 50 m. from its mouth, containing a parish church and a convent of Capuchins. It has a Portuguese garrison, and is surrounded with a rampart and palisadoes, and defended with artillery.

KADAN, a town of Saats, in Bohemia.

Kaddy Carne, in Down, Ulster, a long ledge of rocks on Big Island.

KADERSKILL, a town of New York.

KAFFUNGEN, a town and monastery of Hesse, 5 m. SE of Cassel.

KALIR, a town of Wirtemburg, Suabia.

KALISCH, a palatinate, late of Poland, now of W. Prussia, called also the palatinate of GNESEN, and its capital, seated on the river Prosna, 57 m. NE of Breslaw.

KALKA, a country of Asia, bounded on the N by Russian Siberia; on the E by Chinese Tartary; on the S by the Cobi, or Sandy Desert; and on the W by other parts of Tartary. It is inhabited by the Eluths and Kalmucs.

Kallaner, Lancas. in Amounderness.

KALMUCS, a nation of Tartars, who inhabit that part of the Russian government of Caucasus, that lies between the river Volga, and the river Yaick (now Ural), toward the Caspian Sea; in all which immense tract there is not a house to be seen, as they all live in tents, and remove from one place to another, in quest of pasturage for their large herds of cattle, consisting of horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They neither sow nor reap, nor make hay for their cattle, so that they live without bread, or any sort of vegetable; and in the winter, their cattle fare as other wild beasts. Their food is flesh (especially that of horses), fish, wild fowl, and venison; and they have great plenty of milk, butter, and cheese; but mare's milk is the most esteemed among them; and from it they make a strong spirit, of which they are very fond, and which is clear as water. They are divided into a number of hordes, or clans, each under their own particular khan, and all acknowledging the authority of one principal khan, who is called orchicurtikhan, or king of kings, who derives his pedigree from Tamerlane. All of them, however, have gradually submitted to the government of Russia, or live at present under its protection. They are pagans. They wear coats of stuff, or silk, above which they wear a large, wide, fur coat of sheep-skins, and a cap of the same. Their cattle are large, and their sheep have been long noted for their large tails; their ears hang down like our dogs, and, instead of wool, they have soft curled hair, so that their skins are converted into fur coats. Their horses are small, but swift, hardy, and strong; and many of them pace naturally, and trot at an incredible rate. They eat the flesh of camels, cows, and sheep, but universally give the preference to that of the horse. When they go upon any expedition, they have no regard either to bridges or boats; they no sooner come to a river, than in they plunge with their horses, and, sliding from their backs, hold fast by the manes till they get over, and then immediately mount again, and proceed. They live but 4 months at most in the deserts, and inhabit a most pleasant country all the rest of the year (when it is not overflowed), tending their flocks and herds, fishing, and hunting. When they go upon an expedition, every one takes a sheep with him for his provision, and three horses, which he rides alternately; and when any of them fail, they kill it, and divide the flesh, putting pieces of it under their saddles, and, after riding some time upon it, they eat it without any farther preparation. Their kibbets, or tents, are large, and surprisingly warm, having a fire in the middle, and a hole at the top to let out the smoke; they are 24 feet in diameter, and capable of being enlarged or contracted at pleasure; they are all round, the sides being made of a kind of checkered wicker-work, and the cross-sticks, neatly jointed, for folding together, or extending. The kibbet withstands wind and rain well, and is erected with greater ease and in less time than we could set up an officer's tent. The small-pox is as much dreaded among the Kalmucs as the pestilence among us. When any of them are seized with it, they immediately break up their camp and flee, leaving the sick person in one of their kibbets, or tents, with a killed sheep, part of which is roasted and part raw, and a jar of water, and some wood for fire; if they recover, they follow the horde, but this seldom happens, for they mostly die for want of attendance. In a more extensive sense, however, the Kalmuc's country includes both the Kalmuc and Mongul Tartars, who both formerly composed but one people. The Mongul Tartars are partly independent, and partly subject to China. See MONGULS.

KALNICK, a town of Bracklaw, in Poland.

KALUGA, a town of Russia, capital of Kalugskoe, a government, formerly included in that of Moscow, of which it lies W, and E of the government of Smolenskoe; about 110 m. in length, and from 40 to 90 in breadth. Occa is the principal river, on which the town of Kaluga is situated, 390 m. SE of Petersburgh.

KAMAKURA, an island of Japan, about 3 m. in circumference, on the S coast of Niphon, used as a state prison. The coast of this island is so sharp, that persons and freightage are generally lifted up by cranes.

KALMUNZ, a town of Newberg, in Bavaria, situated at the conflux of the rivers Nab and Vils, 12 m. NNW of Ratisbon.

KAMBALA, MOUNT, a ridge of mountains in Thibet, between the lake Jamdro and the Sampoo river.

KAMINIECK, a town of Poland, capital of the palatinate of Podolia, which is sometimes called Kaminieck, situated on the river Smetricz, which falls into the Dniester, a little below it, 100 m. W of Braclaw. A Popish and an Armenian bishop, and a Castellan, reside in this city; and a court of justice, and a provincial diet, are, or were, lately held here. Here is also a college, which formerly belonged to the Jesuits. It is a castle, built on a rock, and is one of the best fortified towns in Poland, although it is more beholden to nature than art for its strength.

KAMTSCHATKA, a peninsula of Siberia, in the government of Irkutskoi, bounded on the N by the province of Ochotsk; on the E and S by the N. Pacific Ocean; and on the W by the Sea of Ochotsk and the Penzinskoe Gulf. It is about 600 m. in length, and from 30 to 200 in breadth. The southern extremity is Cape Lopatka, in lat. from 52 to 61 N, and lon. 156 45 E, according to captain King, who visited this country in 1779. A chain of high mountains from N to S extends the whole length of the peninsula, and almost equally divides it; whence several rivers take their rise; and empty themselves on both sides into the Pacific Ocean, and the Sea of Ochotsk. Stunted trees are thinly scattered over the whole face of the country, whose bottoms are mossy, with a mixture of low heath; the whole resembling Newfoundland in a most striking degree. This disadvantage of soil, however, is not universal. Four months, commencing at midsummer, may be considered as forming their spring, summer, and autumn, the rest of the year is all dreary winter. They have great quantities of wholesome vegetables, in a wild state, such as chervil, garlic, onions, angelica, and wild celery, with some excellent turnips, and turnip-radishes, upon a few spots of ground in the valleys; and this is the utmost extent of their garden cultivation. They have a variety of wild berries, such as blue berries, round and oval, partridge berries, cranberries, crowberries, blackberries, &c. which are gathered at proper seasons, and preserved by boiling them into a thick jam, without sugar. These constitute a considerable part of the winter provisions, serving as a general sauce to their dried and salt fish, of which kind of food they are, unquestionably, excellent correctives. The natives likewise eat them, by themselves, in puddings, and various other ways, and make decoctions of them for their ordinary liquor. Fish is certainly the staple article of food among the inhabitants of this peninsula, who cannot possibly derive any considerable part of their sustenance either from agriculture or cattle; they, however, obtain some from their forests, particularly in the bear, which to hunt and kill, is with the inhabitants a skilful and dangerous adventure. The people of Kamtschatka may be said to consist of three sorts: the Kamtschatkadales, the Russians, and Cossacks, and a mixture produced by their intermarriages. The habitations of the natives consist of three different kinds, which they call jourts, balagans, and loghouses. They inhabit the first in the winter, and the second in the summer; in the third, introduced by the Russians, only the more wealthy people reside. The external appearance of a jourt resembles a round, squat hillock; a hole, serving for a chimney, window, and door, is left in the centre, and the inhabitants go in and out by the assistance of a long pole, having notches deep enough to afford a little security for the toe. The upper garment of the Kamtschatkadales resembles a waggoner's frock; if for summer wear, it is made of nankeen; if intended for winter, it is made of a skin, having one side tanned, and the hair preserved on the other, which is worn innermost; a close jacket of nankeen, or other cotton stuff, is the next under this; and, beneath that, a shirt made of thin Persian silk, of any colour. They wear long breeches and boots, made of skins, with the hair innermost. They have also a fur cap, with two flaps that are usually tied up close to the head, but are let to fall round the shoulders in rough weather. The true Kamtschatkadales are a people of very remote antiquity, and have for many ages inhabited this peninsula. There are, at present, very few idolaters among them, the Russians having bestowed great pains, and been very successful, in converting them to Christianity. Schools are likewise established in many parts, where the children of both the natives and Cossacks are instructed gratuitously in the Russian language. The Russians first discovered the country in the year 1697; and in 1699, sixty Russian soldiers, with as many Cossacks, penetrated into the heart of the peninsula, levying a tribute of furs in their progress. Their government, considered as a military one, is mild and equitable in a high degree. The natives are permitted to choose their own magistrates, with all the privileges they had ever enjoyed, who refer to the governor of Kamtschatka such cases only, as, from their intricacy or heinousness, they do not choose to decide upon themselves. Bolcheretsk is the principal place, situated on the SW coast, in lat. 52 N.

KANDEGHERE, a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, 70 m. NW of Madras. In the year 1599, it was the capital of a kingdom called Narsinga, the residence of a Hindoo king, whose dominions extended over Tanjore and Madura; and in 1640, a descendant of that prince first permitted the English to form a settlement at Madras.

KANEM, a town and province of Bornou, in Africa.

KANIOW, a city of Kiow, in Poland, situated on the Dnieper.

KANISCHA, a town of Hungary, 96 m. S of Vienna.

KANTCHEOU, a city of China, in the province of Kiangsi, 840 m. S of Pekin. Its jurisdiction contains 12 cities of the third order, and its soil produces the trees from which distils a varnish, reckoned the best in China.

Kantiss, Essex, near Horndon.

KANTOKENIO, a village on the brink of the river Alten, in Lapland, 59 Swedish miles N of Tornea. Here is held a considerable annual fair.

Kanturk, in Cork, Munster.

KAOTCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quangtong. It has within its jurisdiction one city of the second order, and 5 of the third. In this district are a great number of peacocks, and several sorts of birds of prey. There is also a kind of stone, like marble, which naturally represents landscapes, cascades, &c. of which they make tables, and other curious household furniture. It is situated in a very fruitful country, about 36 m. from the sea, and 1130 SSW of Pekin.

KAPOS, a town of Hungary, situated on a river of the same name, which runs into the Danube, 6 m. from Mohacs.

KAPPAS, OLD, a town of N. America, situated on the W. side of the Mississippi, in lat. 34 12 N, and lon. 91 12 W. Near this place, Ferdinand de Soto first discovered the river Mississippi, in 1541.

KARAGINSKOI, an island in the N. Pacific

Ocean, about 80 m. in circumference; situated near the NE coast of Kamtschatka, in lat. 59 N, and lon. 162 E.

KARECK, an island in the Persian Gulf, lying nearly in the middle of it, where all ships bound for Bussorah must call for pilots. It is about 5 m. long and 2 broad; and is subject to the sheick of Bundaric. The Dutch had a flourishing settlement here about the middle of the 18th century, formed by the Baron Kniphausen; but on his quitting their service, it became subject again to its former master.

Karham, Northumb. in Wark barony.

KARICAL, a town of Hindostan, in the kingdom of Tanjore, containing 14 pagodas, 15 mosques, and about 5000 inhab. It was ceded by the king of Tanjore to the French, taken by the English in the year 1760, and retaken in 1779. It is situated on the E coast, on one of the branches of the Cauvery, 12 m. N of Negapatam, and 6 S of Tranquebar.

CARLSRUCH, a town of Baden Durlach, in Suabia. The margrave has here a magnificent palace and gardens. The town is built on a regular plan, and the houses are as uniform as the streets. It is 12 m. N by E of Baden.

Karnback, a hill in Armagh, Ulster. Karn Gaur, a hill in Down, Ulster, 2 m. N of Scraba.

Karnusack, Cornw. a rocky mountain, near Madern.

KASAN, capital of the government of the same name, contains several churches, almost all of which are built of stone, and 11 convents in and near the town. It is seated on the river Casanka, where it falls into the Wolga, 400 m. E by N of Moscow. See KAZANSKOE.

Kathedin, Brecknocks. Wales, near Tulgarth. Katherine Hill, Surry, near Guildford. Katherine's, St. Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Katharine's, St. in the suburbs of Lincoln. Katharine's Hill, St. Hants, near Winchester. Katherington, Hants, SE of Bishop's Waltham.

KAUFFBEUREN, a free town of Suabia.

KAYE'S ISLAND, in the N. Pacific Ocean, near the W coast of N. America, about 30 m. in length and 4 in breadth, discovered and named by captain Cook. The SW point is a naked rock, considerably elevated above the land within it. Pine trees abound in all parts of the island; which indeed is covered, in a manner, with a broad girdle of wood. The trees, however, are far from being of an extraordinary growth; so that they would be of no great service for shipping, excepting as materials for small things. The pine-trees appear to be all of one species; and neither the Canadian pine, nor cypress, are found here. Lat. 59 51 N lon. 143 0 W.

KAYSERSBERG, a town in the depart. of Upper Rhine, 5 m. NW of Colmar.

KAYSERSLAUTERN, a town in the palatinate of the Rhine, seated on the river Lauter, 22 m. SW of Worms.

KAYSERSWERT, a town in the circle of the Lower Rhine, seated on the E side of the river Rhine, 8 m. N of Dusseldorp. The fortifications are demolished. It was engaged a long time to the bishopric of Cologne; but in 1762 it was restored to the elector palatine.

KAZANSKOE, a large country of the Russian empire, formerly subject to the Kalmuc Tartars, to whom the great duke of Moscow, with the other petty principalities of Russia, were tributary. But Ivan Vassil'witch I. the founder of the Russian greatness, towards the end of the 15th century, rescued his country from the Tartar yoke, and, in 1552, the second duke of the same name conquered Kasan, which is now divided into the three Russian governments of Kasan, Simbirsk, and Penza.

KELSO, a handsome and populous town of Roxburghsh. containing a large market-place, its principal, with two small streets, 529 houses, and 4408 inhab. It has some manufactures of flannels, linen, stockings, and shoes. It is governed by a baron baily, and 15 stent masters, who have authority to levy a stent, or rate, on the inhabitants, for the supply of water, repairing the streets, &c. the former of whom, and 7 of the latter, are appointed by the duke of Roxburgh, who is lord of the manor. The celebrated and magnificent abbey, the ruins of which still remain, was founded by David I. in 1128. The environs of it are very agreeable. From the Chalkheugh is a beautiful view of the forks of the rivers, Roxburgh Hill, Springwood Park, and the Fleurs; from Pinnacle Hill is seen a vast extent of country, highly cultivated, watered by long reaches of the Tweed, and well wooded on each margin. Much wheat is raised in this neighbourhood, and the fleeces of the sheep are remarkably fine. Kelso has a good market for corn, and is situated on the river Tweed, over which it has a handsome bridge of six arches, at its conflux with the Tiviot 20 m. SW of Berwick, and 42 SSE of Edinburgh.

KENDAL, also called KIRBY KENDAL, (that is, a Church in a Valley) a handsome town of Westmorel. the largest in the county, and much superior to Appleby, in trade, wealth, buildings, and population. It contains 1496 houses, and 7505 inhab. the houses are handsomely built of limestone, covered with slate. It has been long noted for its woollen manufactories; particularly knit stockings, a thick stuff, called cottons, for the clothing of the people in the West Indies, and for sailors' jackets, and linsey woolsey. There is likewise a considerable tannery; and fish-hooks, waste silk, and wool-cards, are manufactured here. The mills for scouring, fulling, and frizing cloth; and for cutting and rasping dying-wood, &c. are well worth seeing. So early as the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. Kendal was noted for its manufactures, special laws having been enacted in those reigns for the better regulation of the Kendal cloths; and such has been the spirit and industry of the inhabitants, that they have continued to flourish ever since, notwithstanding the disadvantage of possessing no water-carriage. Kendal is pleasantly situated in a valley, among hills, upon the river Kent, over which it has two stone bridges, and one of wood, with a harbour for boats, and communicating, by a canal, with all the late inland navigations, 46 m. S of Carlisle, and 259 NNW of London. Market on Sat.

KENFIG, a small town of Glamorgans. Wales, 7 m. from Bridgend.

Kenford, Devons. near Powderham Castle. A great thoroughfare on the Ken. Kenford, Suff. near Newmarket. Kengwick, W of Worcester.

KENILWORTH, or KILLINGWORTH, Warw. SW of Coventry, and 5 m. from Warwick. It had formerly a castle, encompassed with a chase and park, that was the glory of all this part of England. Here the earl of Leicester entertained queen Elizabeth and her whole court, in a most gay and splendid manner, with a great variety and magnificence of feasts and shows for 17 days. It was demolished in the civil wars. Market on Wednes. Fair on Midsummer-day.

Keningal, Norf. SE of E. Harling. Kenley, Shrops. 3 m. from Wenlock.

KENMARE, a town of Kerry, in Munster, situated at the mouth of a river of the same name, 12 m. S of Killarney, and 155 SW of Dublin.

KENMARE RIVER, on the SW side of Kerry, in Munster, is about 20 m. long and 3 broad. It affords a safe and capacious harbour, but little frequented.

KENMORE, Perths. Scotland, lying on both sides of Loch Tay, 28 m. from Dunkeld, it contains 635 houses, and 3624 inhab.

Kenn, a hamlet of Yatten, Somersets. Kennardington, Kent, near Appledore. Kennarth, Carmarthens. Wales, 12 m. from Carmarthen. Kenne, Devons. near Exeter.

KENNEBEK, a river which rises in the NW part of the province of Main, in New England; and, flowing in a southerly direction, falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between the Bays of Casco and Penobscut, on the coast of the same province.

Kenneden, Devons. in Sherford parish. Keneggy, Cornw. near Penzance. Kennerly, Devons near Crediton.

KENNET, a river celebrated by Pope, as, "The Kennet swift, for silver eels renown'd." It rises about 4 m. from Marlborough, in Wilts, passes by Marlborough, Hungerford, &c. to Newbury, in Berks, where it has been made navigable. It joins the Thames a little below Reading.

Kennet, E. and Little, Wilts, on Marlborough Downs, near the source of the river Kennet. Kennethmont, Aberdeens. Scotland, 20 m. from Inverury; has 2 mineral chalybeate springs. Kennington, a village of Surry, one of the 8 precincts of Lambeth. Near it is an extensive common, noted (till of late) for the execution of malefactors for the county of Surry. Kennington, Kent, near Ashford. Kennington, Berks, in Radley parish, 1 m. S of Oxford. Kensey, a small river in Cornw. Kensington, a village of Middlesex, 2 m. W of Hyde-Park Corner, London. Here is a royal palace, with very extensive gardens, which have become a very fashionable promenade for the beau monde. Kensworth, Herts, E of Studham.

KENT, a county of England, bounded on the W and SW by Surry and Sussex; on the N by the Thames; on the E and SE by the German Ocean and the Straits of Dover; and on the S by Sussex and the English Channel. From E to W it is about 58 m. and from N to S from 30 to 36. It is divided into five lathes, under each of which are several hundreds, which contain 2 cities, 39 market towns, 406 parish churches, 1180 villages, 64,000 houses, and 373,095 inhab. In the soil and face of the country there is great diversity. The banks of the Thames are low and marshy, but backed by a range of chalky eminences, sometimes rising to a moderate height. This kind of hard chalky soil, inclining to barrenness, extends to the NE extremity of the county, and thence round to Dover, exhibiting its nature in the lofty white cliffs, which here bound the island, and produce that striking appearance at sea, which probably gave it the name of Albion. The S part of Kent, called the Weald, is a flat, woody tract, of a clayey soil; fertile, but unwholesome, on account of its moisture. It terminates in the great marsh of Romney. The midland and western districts are a happy mixture of hill and vale, arable and pasture, equal in pleasantness and variety of products, to any part of England. This county produces, beside the usual objects of agriculture, large quantities of hops; fruit of various kinds, especially cherries and apples, of which there are large orchards for the London markets; madder, for dyeing; timber in the woody parts; and birch twigs for brooms, which form no inconsiderable article of commerce for the metropolis. The country inland from Dover, consisting chiefly of open downs, is excellent for feeding of sheep, and many bullocks are fattened to an extraordinary size in Romney Marsh. Its manufactures are but trifling. The principal rivers, beside the Thames, are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother. Maidstone is the county town.

KENT, a county of N. America, in the respective states of Maryland, Delaware, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

KENTAIFFE, MOUNT, a ridge of mountains in the S of Thibet, bordering on Hindostan Proper. On the W side of this ridge are the two heads of the Ganges, and from its E side issues the Sanpoo, or Burrampooter.

Kentbridge, Kent, NW of Rye. Kentbury, Berks, SE of Hungerford. Kentchurch, 11 m. from Hereford. Kentcomb, Higher and Lower, Dorsets. NW of Great Toller. Kentditch, Sussex, NE of Rye. Kentes, Essex, SE of Rochford. Kent Green, Chesh. E of Sandbach. Kenthatch, Kent, S of Westram. Kentisbear, Devons. on the river Culm, E of Columpton. Kentesbury, Devons. 6 m. from Barnstaple. Kentford, Suffolk, near Clare. Kentish Town, Midd. near Hampstead, 3 m. N of London, in the parish of St. Pancras, much improved of late by a new chapel, and several handsome houses. Kentmere, Westm. near Ambleside. The river Ken rises here, about 5 m. N from the Chapel. Kentmere Hall is an ancient building, with a tower, standing under a vast craggy mountain, near the chapel, and 12 m. N from the parish church. Kenton, Midd. 1 mile E of Harrow-on-the-Hill. Kenton, Midd. NE of Sunbury. Kenton, Northumb. near Newcastle. Kenton, Devons. 2 m. from Exmouth. Kent Sahd, Lancas. a bay in the NW part of the county, which receives the river Ken, but has such dangerous quicksands, that it cannot be crossed, at low water, without the assistance of a guide, who is kept there at the public expense. Kenton, Suffolk, 3 m. from Debenham.

KENTSINGUEN, a town of Suabia, in the Brisgau, near the E side of the Rhine, 13 m. NW of Friburgh.

KENTUCKY, a country of N. America, situated in its central part, near the lat. of 38 0 N, and 85 0 W lon. It is bounded on the N and NW by the Ohio; on the E by Virginia; on the S by the Tenassee State, including the country of the Upper Cherokees; and on the W and SW by the Mississippi and the Cherokee River. It is about 300 m. in length from E to W, and from 20 to 150 in breadth from N to S, and is at present divided into 9 counties, 7 of which are Lincoln, Fayette, Bourbon, Mercer, Jefferson, Nelson, and Maddison; and contains 406,511 inhab. The principal rivers are the Ohio, the Kentucky, the Licking River, the Red River, the Elkhorn, Dick's River, Green River, Salt River, Cumberland, and the Great Kenhaway, or New River. These are all navigable for boats almost to their sources, without rapids, for the greatest part of the year. This country is generally level, and abounds with limestone. The springs and streams lessen in June, and continue low, hindering navigation, until November, when the autumnal rains prepare the rivers for boats, and replenish the whole country with water. The soil is amazingly fertile; the inhabitants distinguished its quality by first, second, and third rate lands; and scarcely any such thing as a marsh or swamp is to be found. This country has a more temperate and healthy climate than the other settled parts of America. The winter is short, and snow seldom falls deep, or lies long. The W winds often bring storms, and the E winds clear the sky; but there is no steady rule of weather in that respect, as in the northern states. The W winds are sometimes cold; but the weather, even then, is not so intensely severe as these winds are in Pennsylvania. The country, in general, may be considered as well timbered, producing large trees of many kinds, and exceeded by no country in variety. Those which are peculiar to Kentucky, are the sugar-maple, which grows in all parts in great plenty, and furnishes every family with plenty of excellent sugar; and the honey-locust, which is curiously surrounded with large thorny spikes, bearing broad and long pods, in form of peas, has a sweet taste, and makes excellent beer. Here are also the coffee-tree, which greatly resembles the black oak, grows large, and also bears a pod, in which is inclosed coffee; the papwa-tree, which does not grow to a great size, is a soft wood, bears a fine fruit, much like a cucumber in shape and size, and tastes sweet; black mulberry trees in abundance; the wild cherry-tree, which is of a large size, and supplies the inhabitants with boards for all their buildings; the buck-eye, a very soft wood, bearing a remarkably black fruit; and some other kinds of trees not common elsewhere. Here is great plenty of fine cane, on which the cattle feed, and grow fat; and the cane-brakes are so thick and tall, that it is difficult to pass through them. Where no cane grows, there is abundance of wild rye, clover, and buffalo-grass, covering vast tracts of country, and affording excellent food for cattle. The fields are covered with abundance of wild herbage, not common to other countries. The Shawanese salad, wild lettuce, pepper-grass, and many more, as yet unknown to the inhabitants, but which, no doubt, have excellent virtues. Here are seen the finest crown-imperials in the world; the cardinal-flower, so much extolled for its scarlet colour; and all the year, excepting the winter months, the plains and valleys are adorned with variety of flowers, of the most admirable beauty. Here is also found the tulip-bearing laurel-tree, or magnolia, which has an exquisite smell, and continues to blossom and seed for several months together. Iron ore and lead are found in abundance, but we do not hear of any silver or gold mines. The western waters produce plenty of fish and fowl. The fish common to the Ohio, are the buffalo-fish, of a large size, and cat-fish, sometimes exceeding one hundred weight. Trout have been taken in Kentucky River, weighing 30 pounds. The mullet, rock, perch, gar-fish, and eel, are here in plenty. Suckers, sun-fish, and other hook fish, are abundant. On these waters, and especially on the Ohio, the geese and ducks are amazingly numerous. The land-fowls are turkeys; a species of grouse, which the inhabitants call pheasants; and quails, to which they give the name of partridges. Here likewise is the parroquet, a bird every way resembling a parrot, but much smaller; and the ivory-bill woodcock, of a whitish colour, with a white plume. It flies screaming exceedingly sharp; and it is asserted, that its bill is pure ivory, a circumstance very singular in the plumy tribe. Here also is the great owl, resembling its kind in other parts, but remarkably different in its vociferation, sometimes making a strange, surprising noise, like a man in the most extreme danger and difficulty. Serpents are not numerous, and are such as are to be found in other parts of the continent, except the bull, the horned and the mockason snakes. Among the native animals, is the buffalo, much resembling a large bull, of a great size, with a large head, thick, short, crooked horns, and broader in his forepart than behind. Upon his shoulder is a large lump of flesh, covered with a thick bush of long wool and curly hair, of a dark brown colour. They do not rise from the ground as our cattle, but spring up at once upon their feet; are of a broad make, and clumsy appearance, with short legs, but run fast, and scarcely turn aside for any thing when chased. They weigh from five to ten hundred weight, are excellent meat, supplying the inhabitants, in many parts, with beef, and their hides make good leather. They are innocent, harmless creatures. There are still to be found many deer, elks, and bears. There are also panthers, wild cats, and wolves. The waters have plenty of beavers, otters, minks, and musk-rats; nor are the animals common to other parts wanting, such as foxes, rabbits, squirrels, racoons, groundhogs, polecats, and opossums. Most of the species of the domestic quadrupeds have been introduced since the settlement; such as horses, cows, sheep, and hogs, which are prodigiously multiplied, suffered to run in the woods without a keeper, and only brought home when wanted. Many caves are found in this country amazingly large, in some of which a person may travel several miles under a fine limestone rock, supported by curious arches and pillars; in most of them runs a stream of water. Kentucky was purchased by the state of Virginia, of the Indians, in 1775, and formed into an independent state in 1792. In 1790, the number of inhabitants was 73,677, and from its rapid increase in population, may now probably be estimated at 200,000. There are many considerable towns, the principal of which are Lexington and Washington.

KENTUCKY, a river of N. America, which rises with three heads, about 18 m. to the NW of the Laurel Mountains, in the state to which it gives name. One branch, called the North Fork, rises in lat. 37 5 N and 82 40 W; another, called the South Fork, rises 45 m. to the W of the North Fork; and a third branch, called the Middle Fork, rises between the other two. These branches unite together near Franklinville, and taking a NW course, fall into the Ohio, in lat. 38 35 N and lon. 85 30 W. Among the natural curiosities of the country, are the winding banks of this river, and of that called Dick's River. They are rather precipices than banks; for, almost every where, the astonished observer beholds three or four hundred feet of a solid, perpendicular, limestone rock; in some parts a fine white marble, either curiously arched, pillared, or blocked up into fine building stones. These precipices are like the sides of a deep trench, or canal: the land above being level, except where creeks set in, and crowned with fine groves of red cedar. It is only at particular places that this river can be crossed, one of which is worthy of admiration; a great road, large enough for waggons, made by the buffalo, sloping, with an easy descent, from the top to the bottom of a very large steep hill, at or near the river above Leestown.

Kenvil, Surry, near Woking. Kenward, Sussex, near Cuckfield. Kenwick, Shrops. W of Wem. Kenwyn, Cornw. N of Truro. Kenyon, in the parish of Winwick, Lancas.

KEOWE, a town of S. Carolina, situated on a river of the same name (which rises in the Nunic Mountains, and empties itself into the river Broad at Petersburg), 53 m. NW of Petersburg.

Kepeyre, on the Wear, near Durham. Kepik, Northumb. S of Chollerton.

KEPLERS, a town of Pennsylvania, 21 m. NNW of Reading.

Keppernham, Hants, near Stockbridge. Kepwick, Yorks. E of Northallerton. Kerbrough, Yorks. SE of Gisborn.

KERCOLANG, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, about 20 m. in circumference. The face of the country seems to be steep hills and extensive valleys, and every part to be covered with trees and verdure, with some pleasant cultivated ground. The houses stand on posts, and appear to be well built, and neatly thatched. Their fishing hooks and lines are mostly European; and the inhabitants are Malays. Their clothing, in general, is made of a coarse kind of calico, though some wear silk; most of them have a kind of turban round their heads; and a few have been seen with a Chinese pointed hat. Lat. 4 28 N lon. 126 31 E.

KERERA, an island in the Sound of Mull, Argyles.

Kergo, Cornw. W of Columb.

KERGUELEN'S LAND, an island in the South Pacific Ocean (first discovered by M. Kerguelen, a Frenchman), visited by captain Cook, in 1779, which, from its sterility, has been called the Island of Desolation. No place hitherto discovered, in either hemisphere, affords so scanty a field for the naturalist as this spot. Some verdure, indeed, appeared when at a small distance from the shore, which might raise the expectation of meeting with a little herbage; but all this lively appearance was occasioned by one small plant, resembling saxifrage, which grew upon the hills in large spreading tufts, in a kind of rotten turf, which, if dried, might serve for fuel, and was the only thing seen here that could possibly be applied to that purpose. A few amphibious animals were discovered. Lat. 49 26 S lon. 69 37 E.

KERJE, a province of Arabia, on the frontiers of Yemen, the principal town of which is Imama.

Kering, a river in Denbighs. which runs into the Dee, between Chirk and Bystock, about 5 m. S of Wrexham. Kering, a river in Merion. which runs into the Dovy, near Llanworing.

KERMAN, a province of Persia, bounded on the N by Segestan and a part of Korasan; on the E by Mecran; on the S by the Persian Gulf; and on the W by Farsistan. The northern part is barren, and nearly desert, without rivers or brooks, and the air unhealthy. Towards the S the air is more pure, and the land fertile. The Guebres are numerous, who are chiefly employed in manufactures of stuffs and silk. Here are some mines of copper, lead, and iron; also sheep, which lose their fleeces in spring, and become as naked as sucking pigs; the inhabitants drive a great trade in their wool. Sirgian is the capital.

Kern, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Kernbray, or Carnbarrah, Cornw. near the Land's End. Kernbridge, Cornw. near Kellington. Kerneth, Cornw. NE of Tregony. Kernsew, Cornw. NW of Penryn.

KERPEN, a town, capital of a county of Westphalia, 10 m. ESE of Juliers.

KERRY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean; on the N by the river Shannon; on the E by the counties of Limeric and Cork; and on the S by a part of Cork and the ocean. It is about 54 m. long, and from 18 to 40 broad. It possesses many fine harbours, and the southern district is plain and fertile, but a large part of it is full of mountains, almost inaccessible, so that little corn is produced, and grazing is more attended to. Considerable quantities of beef, butter, hides, and tallow, are exported. It contains 84 parishes, about 19,400 houses, and 107,000 inhab. Iron ore is to be had in most of the southern baronies, and here are several spas or medicinal springs. The principal rivers are the Blackwater, Feal, Gale and Brick, Cash in Mang, Lea, Flesk, Laune, Carrin, Farthin, Finny, and Roughty. The county town is Tralee.

Kerry, Montgom. Wales, 3 m. from Newtown.

Kersal, Notts. near Besthorp.

KERSHAW, a county of S. Carolina.

Kerwent, Monmouths. 5 m. from Chepstow, where a Roman tesselated pavement, in high preservation, is inclosed with walls, to prevent injury to it. The colours are incomparably brilliant. Kery, a river in Cardigans. which runs into the Tivy at Kilgwyn, about 7 m. above Cardigan. Kesgrave, Suffolk, between Woodbridge and Ipswich.

KESROAN, a chain of mountains in Asia, on the coast of Syria, which makes a part of Mount Libanus. It is one of the most pleasant and fertile countries in the East.

KESSEL, a town of Prussian Guelderland, with a castle, seated on the W. side of the river Maese, 7 m. N of Ruremond.

KESSEL SEE, a lake of Carinthia.

KESSELDORF, a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony, 7 m. W of Dresden.

Kessilgum, a river in Merioneths. which runs into the Avon, below Kimner Abbey, about 2 m. below Dolgelly. Kessingland, Suffolk, 8 m. from Lowestoffe.

KESTEVEN, one of the three divisions of Lincolns. containing the western part of the county, from the middle to the southern extremity. It possesses a variety of soil; but, on the whole, though intermixed with large heaths, is a fertile country. Part of the fens of Lincolns. are in this district; the air of which, however, is more salubrious than that of the district of Holland; and the soil, moreover, is more fruitful.

Kestle, Cornw. near Helford Haven. Keston, Hunts. NW of Kimbolton. Keston, Kent, 5 m. from Bromley, and 14 from London. At Holwood Hill, in this parish, are the remains of a large and strong fortification, probably a Roman one, of an oblong form; the area of which is partly inclosed with rampires and double ditches, of a great height and depth. It is near 2 m. in circumference, and incloses near 100 acres of ground. A path descends from the camp to the spring head of the river Ravensbourn. This river flows hence through Bromley and Hayes to Beckenham and Lewisham, and, crossing the great road at Deptford Bridge, falls into the Thames a little below. Keswell, Cornw. near Padstow Haven.

KESWICK, a small, but neat and well-built town of Cumb. consisting of one long street of 300 houses. It has considerable manufactures of woollen stuffs, flannels, duffels, &c. and is pleasantly seated in a beautiful and extensive vale, surrounded by hills, through which flows the Derwent, 25 m. NW by N of Kendal, and 287 NNW of London. Market on Sat.

KESWICK, VALE OF, a romantic spot, in the southern part of Cumb. lately much visited by the admirers of beautiful scenes in nature. Here is the lake Keswick, or, more properly, the Lake of Derwent Water. To the N of this romantic piece of water, soars the lofty mountain Skiddaw, near the foot of which is Bassingthwaite Water. To the S are the craggy hills of Borrowdale, where the eagles build their nests, and whence the Derwent derives its supplies of water. See BORROWDALE, BASINGTHWAITE, DERWENT WATER, and SKIDDAW.

Keswick, SW of Norwich. Keswick, Yorks. SW of Wetherby. Kesworth, Dorsets. near Wareham. Ketheringham, Norf. near Windham. Ketterickswart, Yorks. N. Riding, near Catterick Bridge.

KETTERING, a handsome, populous, trading town in Northampions. seated on a river that runs into the Nen, 12 m. NE of Northampton, and 75 NW of London; with manufactures of lace, shalloons, serges, tammies, &c. in which near 2000 hands are said to be employed. It has a sessions-house for the county. Market on Frid.

Ketteris, Forfars. on the N. side of the Sid.

Kettlebaston, Suffolk, on the river Breton, near Bilston. This manor is held by the service of carrying a golden sceptre, with a dove on it, at the king's coronation, and an ivory sceptre, with a golden dove, at the coronation of the queen. Kettleborough, Suffolk, S of Framlingham. Kettleby, Lincolns. W of Alford, near Glandford Bridge. Kettlesdale Spring, Yorks. W. Riding, near Kirby Lonsdale. Kettlesmed, Yorks. NW of Rippon. Kettlesmere, Yorks. SW of Masham. Kettleston, Norf. between Fakenham and Holt. Kettlethorp, near the Fossdyke, NW of Lincoln. Kettlewell, Yorks. W. Riding, lies under a hill, between Langshethdale Chase and Netherdale. Ketton, Durh. on the Skern, N of Darlington. Kettom, Lincolns. 2 m. from Stamford. Ketton, Rutlands. on a rivulet that runs into the Welland, near Tinewell. A certain rent is collected here annually from the inhabitants, of 2*s. pro ocreis reginæ*, i. e. for the queen's boots, though we do not read of any who ever wore them. Its church is remarkably neat, having the form of a little cathedral. Kevenny, or Govenny, a river in Monmouths. which runs into the Usk at Abergavenny. Keveny, a river in Anglesey, which issues from the high hills N of Coydana, and runs into the Irish Channel, on the SW. side of the island, 2 m. and a half W of Newburgh. Keverdale, Lancas. E of the Ribble, opposite to Preston. Keverel, Cornw. near St. Germain's. Kevern, St. Cornw. on the SW. side of Falmouth Haven. Kevernal, 5 m. S of Hereford. Kevil, Wilts, 2 m. E of Trowbridge. Kevington, Kent, in St. Mary Cray parish.

Kew, a village of Surry, on the banks of the Thames, opposite to Old Brentford, and 7 m. W by S of London. On its green is Kew House, a royal palace, celebrated for its fine gardens, and the king's exotic garden. The last has been brought to great perfection, by the introduction of many new plants from Africa and New South Wales; and is known throughout all Europe, by the late Mr. Aiton's Hortus Kewensis. The palace was formerly the seat of Mr. Molineux, secretary to George II. when prince of Wales, but afterwards became the residence of the late prince and princess of Wales, who greatly improved both the house and gardens. His present Majesty, also, has considerably enlarged the gardens, and formed a junction with them and Richmond gardens. From Kew to Brentford is an elegant stone bridge, of 7 arches, over the Thames, built in 1789, from a design of the late Mr. Paine. Kewe, St. Cornw. near Penzance. Kewe, St. Cornw. between Camelford and Padstow Haven. Kewestock, Somersets. on the Bristol Channel, between Uphill and Woodspring. Kexby, Linc. on the Trent, SE of Gainsborough. Kexby, E of York, near the Derwent.

KEXHOLM, a town of the Russian empire, in the government of Wiburg, seated on two small islands of the river Woxen, which here falls into the Lake Ladoga. The houses are built with wood; it is not very large, but near it is a considerable salmon fishery. It is 67 m. N of Petersburg. Lat. 61 3 N lon. 30 25 E.

Key, Cornw. at the head of Falmouth Haven. Keynele, Wilts, near Castlecomb. Keynsham, Glouces. in Wollaston parish.

KEYNSHAM, (proverbially called SMOKY, i. e. foggy) a town of Somersets. the chief trade of which is malting. Every year, in the spring, the river here swarms with millions of little eels, scarcely as big as goose quills, which the inhabitants catch, on the top of the water, with small nets, and scowering off their skins, make them into cakes, (reckoned here a dainty) which they fry and eat. It is a great thoroughfare, on the lower road, between Bath and Bristol, and is seated on the river Avon, over which it has a bridge of 15 arches, (and another bridge over the Chew) 5 m. SE of Bristol, and 115 W of London. Market on Thurs.

Keynton, Shrops. NW of Newport. Keynton, Little, Dorsets. in Stower Westover parish. Keynton, St. Michael's, Wilts, E of Castlecomb. Keynton, West, Wilts, W of Castlecomb. Keysoe, Bedf. 9 m. from Bedford. Keyworth, SE of Nottingham. Keysworth, Dorsets. 2 m. NE of Wareham.

KEYWAWA, a small island in Charlestown harbour, S. Carolina.

KHARIZM, a country of Independent Tartary, extending from the river Amu to the Caspian Sea, bounded on the N and S by wide deserts, the chief town of which is Khiva.

KHARKOF, a government of the Russian empire, bounded on the N by Kursk, on the E by Voronetz, and on the S by Ekaterinoslav. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the river Uda, which falls into the river Donetz, 332 m. S of Moscow.

KHERSON, or CHERSON. See CHERSON.

KIAKING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Tchekiang, 590 m. SSE of Pekin. Canals are cut through all parts of the city, and in all the streets there are piazzas, to walk under, free from rain. There are many triumphal arches, both within and without the city, and 15 marble towers, on the sides of the canal, by which all the barks pass. It is noted for its breed of silkworms.

KIANG MAN, a province of China, bounded on the N by Changtong; on the E by the Gulf of Nanquin; on the S by Tchekiang and Kiang-Si; and on the W by Honan and Hon-Quang. It contains 14 cities of the first rank, and 93 of the second and third, which are very populous, and of the greatest note for trade in the empire. It is the rendezvous of all the great barks, being full of lakes, rivers, and canals; and their silks, japanned goods, ink, and paper, are in high esteem. In the city of Changhi only, there are 200,000 weavers of cottons and muslins. Nanking is the capital.

KIANG-SI, a province of China, bounded on the N by Kiang-Nan; on the S by Quangtong; on the W by Hon-Quang; and on the E by Fokien and Tchekiang. The mountains, with which the province is surrounded, are either covered with wood, or famous for their minerals, simples, and medicinal plants. Its soil is very rich and fertile, being well watered by brooks, lakes, and rivers, which abound with fish; and there are mines of gold, silver, lead, iron, and tin. The rice and arrack here are excellent; but it is more particularly noted for its fine porcelain, which is made at Kiang-Tching.

KIANGTCHEOU, a city of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chansi, 300 m. SW of Pekin.

Kibberd, Cornw. SW of Columb. Kibblesworth, Durh. in Lamsley parish.

KIBURG, a town of Zurich.

Kibworth, Beauchamp, and Harcourt, Leic. NW of Hallaton. Kicklow, Cornw. SW of Truro. Kicksend, Middl. near Barnet. Kidal, Yorks. near Aberforth. Kidbrook Hall, Sussex, 2 m. from East Grinstead. Kiddemore Green, Staff. near Brewood.

KIDDERMINSTER, a town of Worcesters. the principal manufacturing place in the county, and long celebrated for its different manufactures of woollens, carpets, poplins, crapes, bombazeens, &c. containing 1546 houses. Its former trade of stuffs, however, is much declined, on account of the general use of cotton goods; but its carpet manufactory has greatly increased; and it is still the first market in England for pile, or plush carpets, which, for beauty of colour and patterns, exceed any other. These are frequently called Wilton, from having been first made at that town; but, at present, by much the greater part are made at Kidderminster. The silk and worsted trades have also been introduced here, and employ about 2000 hands. The goods go chiefly to Portugal, and their carriage has been much facilitated by the late canal communications. It is seated under a hill, on the river Stour, 14 m. SE of Bridgenorth, and 125 NW of London. Market on Thurs.

Kiddesley Park, Derbys. S of Alfreton. Kiddington, Chesh. near Malpas. Kiddington, Oxf. 4 m. from Woodstock, on the river Glym, which divides the parish in two parts. The chancel of its church is in the Saxon style, with a zigzag arch behind the altar. In the garden of the manor-house is an antique font, brought from Edward the Confessor's chapel, at Islip, and wherein, it is said, he received baptism. In Hill Wood, near this place, is a Roman encampment, in extraordinary preservation, but little noticed. Kiderew, Staff. near Talk.

KIDWELLY, a town of Carmarthens. noted formerly for the clothing trade. The remains of its castle are extremely well preserved, and shew it to have been very stately and magnificent. A canal has been cut from hence to some collieries at Pwyllgod, about 4 m. distant whence coal is brought down and exported. It is situated on the Gwandrath Vach, a branch of the Towy, which empties itself into that river, at its efflux into the Bristol Channel, 9 m. S of Carmarthen, and 224 W by N of London. Market on Frid. Fairs on May 24, July 22, and October 29.

KIEL, a rich and considerable town of Germany, capital of Russian Holstein, containing a university, a college or gymnasium, 3 churches, and about 800 houses. It stands upon a small peninsula, in a bay of the Baltic, and has a very commodious harbour for ships of the largest size. It is already one of the most commercial places in Holstein; and its trade will be still further augmented, as the inland navigation across the peninsula is now finished. By this navigation it is proposed to unite the Northern Sea with the Baltic; and it has been formed across Danish Holstein by the Canal of Kiel, and the river Eyder, which passes by Rendsburgh, and falls into the German Ocean at Tonningen. This canal was begun in 1777, and has been lately finished, and opened for navigation. Kiel is 46 m. N of Hamburg.

KILDA, ST. a small island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, about 11 leag. W of N. Uist. The inhabitants live chiefly by fishing and catching wild fowls. In the latter employment, they are amazingly adventurous, being let down by a rope from the summit of high, precipitous rocks, where they clamber among the rugged cliffs, in search of the eggs and nests of various birds. But the more safe and common method of catching these fowls is, by spreading a large net over the face of the rock where they lodge, in which great numbers are at once entangled, and lowered down into a boat. It is the most westerly island of Great Britain. Lat. 55 48 N lon. 8 18 W.

Kildale, Yorks. E of Stokesley.

Kildangon, in Kildare, Leinster.

KILDARE, a town of Leinster, capital of a county of the same name. It is chiefly supported by frequent horse races, on what is called the Curragh, a fine plain, containing upwards of 4000 acres, formerly a forest of oaks. In the neighbourhood are the celebrated remains of many religious houses. It is 27 m. SW of Dublin.

KILDARE, a county in the province of Leinster, 33 m. in length, and from 12 to 21 in breadth. It is bounded on the W by King and Queen's County; on the N by Meath; on the E by Dublin and Wicklow; and on the S by Carlow. It contains 11,200 houses, and about 56,000 inhab. and is a fine, arable, fertile country, well watered by the Barrow, Liffey, Boyne, and other rivers. The assizes are held alternately at Athy and Naas.

Kildorery, in Cork, Munster. Kildroghill, in Kildare, Leinster. Kildysart, in Clare, Munster. Kilevally, in W. Meath, Leinster. Kilfenora, in Clare, Munster, 12 m. KILIA, a town of Bessarabia, at the mouth of the river Danube, situated in an island formed by it, 20 m. ENE of Ismael, and 290 NE of Constantinople.

Kilkeele, in Down, Ulster. Kilkelly, in Roscommon, Connaught.

KILKENNY, a populous trading town of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name. It has a small cathedral, is one of the neatest towns in the kingdom, and contains about 17,000 inhab. The borough of St. Canice, or Irish Town, is joined to English Town, which is the principal, and, both together, form one large town. The manufactures chiefly carried on here, are coarse woollen cloths, blankets of extraordinary fine quality, and considerable quantities of starch. The houses are decorated with a beautiful black and white marble, dug from quarries near the town, and which is cut and polished by water. It is seated on the river Nore, over which it has two handsome bridges, 26 m. N of Waterford, 65 NE of Cork, and 54 SW of Dublin. Lat. 52 36 N lon. 7 18 W.

KILKENNY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 35 m. in length, and 18 in breadth. It is bounded on the W by Tipperary, on the N by Queen's County, on the E by Carlow and Wexford, and on the S by Waterford. It contains 127 parishes, about 17,750 houses, and near 100,000 inhab. The surface is generally level, and the soil fertile; and, being proper for tillage, produces corn, wool, marble, and a species of coal, which, like charcoal, burns without smoke. The country abounds with fine plantations, and is, from the purity of the air, esteemed extremely healthful. The principal rivers are the Barrow, which bounds it on the E, the Suir, which forms its southern boundary, and the Nore, which crosses it from N to S.

Kill, in Dublin, Leinster, 5 m. from the metropolis. Kill, in Kildare, Leinster. Kilcacounty, in Cork, Munster. Killagh, in Kerry, Munster.

KILLALOE, a city of Clare, in Munster, seated on the river Shannon, over which it has a bridge of 19 arches, 10 m. N of Limerick, and 86 SW of Dublin. Here is a considerable salmon and eel fishery.

Killam, Northumb. S of Brankeston. Killamarsh, Derbys. 9 m. from Chesterfield.

KILLARNEY, a town of Kerry, in Munster, situated on the side of the lake of the same name, 36 m. W of Cork, 50 SW of Limerick, and 143 SW of Dublin. Within half a mile of this place are the ruins of the cathedral of Aghadoe, an ancient bishopric united to Ardfert.

KILLARNEY, a beautiful lake of Kerry, in Munster, otherwise called Lough Lean, from its being surrounded by high mountains. It is properly divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lakes. The northern, or lower lake, is about 6 m. in length, and from 3 to 4 in breadth. The country on this and the eastern boundary is diversified with gentle swells, many of which afford beautiful prospects of the lake and the surrounding scenery. The S shore is composed of immense mountains, rising abruptly from the water, and covered with woods of the finest timber. From the centre of the lake, the view of this range is astonishingly sublime, presenting to the eye an extent of forest 6 m. in length, and nearly a mile in breadth; hanging as a robe of rich luxuriance on the sides of two mountains, whose bare tops, rising above the whole, form a perfect contrast to the verdure of the lower region. On the side of one of these mountains is O'Sullivan's Cascade, which falls into the lake with a roar that strikes the timid with awe. The view of this sheet of water is uncommonly fine, appearing as if it were descending from an arch of wood, which overhangs it above, 70 feet in height from the point of view. Coasting along this shore affords an almost endless entertainment, every change of position presenting a new scene; the rocks, hollowed and worn into a variety of forms by the waves, and the trees and shrubs bursting from the pores of the sapless stone, forced to assume the most uncouth shapes, to adapt themselves to their fantastic situations. The islands are not so numerous in this as in the upper lake; but there is one of uncommon beauty, namely, Innisfallen, nearly opposite O'Sullivan's Cascade. It contains 18 Irish acres. The coast is formed into a variety of bays and promontories, skirted and crowned with arbutus, holly, and other shrubs and trees. The interior parts are diversified with hills and dales, and gentle declivities, on which every tree and shrub appears to advantage; the soil is rich, even to exuberance; and trees of the largest size incline across the vales, forming natural arches, with ivy intwining in the branches, and hanging in festoons of foliage. The promontory of Mucruss, which divides the upper from the lower lake, is a perfect land of enchantment; and a road is carried through the centre of it, which unfolds all the interior beauties of the place. Among the distant mountains, Turk appears an object of magnificence; and Mangerton's more lofty, though less interesting summit, soars above the whole. The passage to the upper lake is round the extremity of Mucruss, which confines it on one side, and the approaching mountains on the other. Here is that celebrated rock, called the Eagle's Nest, which produces wonderful echoes. The upper lake is about 4 m. in length, and from 2 to 3 in breadth; it is almost surrounded by mountains, from which descend a number of beautiful cascades. The islands in this lake are numerous, and afford an amazing variety of picturesque views. The centre lake, which communicates with the upper, is small in comparison with the other two, and does not shew an equal variety. The shores however are, in many places, indented with beautiful bays, surrounded with dark groves of trees, some of which have a very picturesque appearance, when viewed from the water. The eastern boundary is formed by the base of Mangerton, down the steep side of which descends a cascade, visible for 150 yards. This fall of water is supplied by a circular lake near the summit of the mountain, called the Devil's Punch Bowl; which, on account of its immense depth and continual overflow of water, is considered as one of the greatest curiosities in Killarney. One of the best prospects which this admired lake affords is from a rising ground near the ruined cathedral of Aghadoe. In the several mountains adjacent to the lakes, vestiges of ancient mines of iron, lead, and copper, are still to be seen.

Killashee, in Longford, Leinster. Killbarmedan, in Waterford, Munster. Killbarrack, in Dublin, Leinster, 5 m. from the metropolis. Killberry, in Meath, Leinster.

KILLEVAN, a town of Monaghan, in Ulster, 8 m. SW of the town of Monaghan.

Killhoy, in Kilkenny, Leinster.

KILLICRANKIE, a noted pass of Perths. near the junction of the Tumel with the Garry. It is the grand entrance into the Highlands in those parts, and is formed by the lofty mountains impending over the Garry, which rushes through in a deep, darksome, and rocky channel, overhung with trees, forming a scene of horrible grandeur. In the last century, this was a pass of much difficulty and danger: a path, hanging over a tremendous precipice, threatened destruction to the least false step of the traveller. At present, a fine military road gives an easy access to the remote Highlands; and the two sides are joined by a fine arch.

Killmacabea, in Cork, Munster. Killmacduagh, in Galway, Connaught, 2 m. W of Gort. The walls of a cathedral, the ruins of a monastery, and of several chapels, with a large round tower, of very ancient and rude masonry, denote the pristine consequence of this now decayed village. Killmaclege, Killmacombe, Killmeaden, and Killmolash, all in Waterford, Munster.

KILLMAURS, a town of Ayrs. 4 m. ENE of Irvine.

Killoges, in Mayo, Connaught. Killoteran, in Waterford, Munster.

KILLOUGH, or PORT ST. ANNE, a town of Down, in Ulster, 76 m. N by E of Dublin. It lies N of St. John's Point, and has a good quay, from which considerable quantities of barley are exported. Here is a profitable manufacture of salt. At a small distance from the town, near the sea, is a rock, in which there is an oblong hole, whence a strange noise is heard, at the ebbing and flowing of the tide, somewhat resembling the sound of a huntsman's horn. At the coming in of the tide, whilst the waters are beating up under the rock, a cold air bursts from it, with a mixture of spray; but as the waters retire during the ebb, there is a strong draft of air sets in at the hole, to fill up or prevent the vacuum which the retiring of the water would produce. In an open field, about a quarter of a mile from the town, there is a very curious cave, about 27 yards long, which has a winding passage, two feet and a half broad, with 3 doors in it, besides the entrance, leading to a circular chamber, 3 yards in diameter, where there is a fine, cool, limpid well.

Killow, in Derry, Ulster. Killowen Point, an excellent natural harbour, about 2 m S of Restrevor, in Down, Ulster. Kill, St. Nicholas, in Waterford, Munster, between the city of Waterford and the sea.

KILMAINHAM, a decayed town, situated on the W. extremity of the city of Dublin, in a pretty little valley, on the great western road. It was some time the seat of government, before the castle at Dublin was appropriated to that purpose. A stream of water runs in the bottom, which carries some mills, and on which there are several tan-yards. On the hill on one side, stands the Royal Hospital of Invalids, an elegant building; and, on the opposite hill, the Foundling Hospital. The quarter sessions for the county of Dublin, and the election for the knights of the shire, are held here.

KILMALLOCK, a once celebrated, but now decayed town of Limerick, in Munster. From its many and extensive ruins, it has obtained the name of the Irish Balbeck. About two centuries ago, it appears to have been one of the best-built inland towns in the kingdom; the walls of many large houses, of stone and excellent workmanship, with the ruins of churches and monasteries, walls and gates, remain to this day, to testify its former splendour. It is 16 m. S of Limerick, and 107 SW of Dublin.

Kilmanbridge, Surry, in Charlewood parish, is so called from a great slaughter made of the Danish plunderers, by the inhabitants of this county and Sussex.

KILMARNOCK, a town of Ayrs, containing about 5670 inhab. It is noted for its manufactures of gloves, carpets, stockings, nightcaps, bonnets, and other woollen goods, and is 15 m. SW of Glasgow.

Kilmarr Rock, Cornw. on a very high hill, N of Leskeard; has at a distance the appearance of a city, though it be only a covert for foxes.

KING GEORGE, a county of Virginia.

KING GEORGE'S ISLANDS, two islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by commodore Byron, in 1765, and visited by captain Cook, in 1778. The larger is about 27 m. in circumference, low, and bordered by a coral rock. Lat. 14 41 N lon. 149. 15 W.

KING GEORGE'S SOUND, the name given by captain Cook, in 1778, to the harbour which he discovered on the W. coast of N. America, at the mouth of a great river, in lon. 126 48 W, and lat. 49 33 N. But the natives called it Nootka, the name now generally adopted by the English. Upon the sea-coast, the land is tolerably high and level; but within the Sound it rises into steep hills, which have a uniform appearance. The trees of which the woods are composed, are the Canadian pine, white cypress, and two or three other sorts of pine. In general, the trees grow here with great vigour, and are of a large size. About the rocks and borders of the woods were seen some strawberry plants, and raspberry, currant, and gooseberry bushes, all in a flourishing state. The principal animals seen here were racoons, martens, and squirrels. Birds are far from being numerous, and those that are to be seen are remarkably shy, owing, perhaps, to their being continually harrassed by the natives, who take them for food, and use their feathers as ornaments. The variety of fish is not very great here, yet they are in greater quantities than birds. The principal sorts are the common herring, a silver-coloured bream, and another of a brown colour. The stature of the natives is, in general, below the common standard; but their persons are not proportionably slender, being usually pretty plump, though not muscular. The women are, in general, of the same size and proportion as the men. Their bodies are always covered with red paint, but their faces are ornamented with a variety of colours, a black, a bright red, or a white colour; the last of which gives them a ghastly and horrible appearance. They appear to be docile, courteous, and good-natured; but they are quick in resenting injuries, and as quickly forget them. A rattle and a small whistle are the only instruments of music that were seen among them. Their houses consist of very long broad planks, resting upon the edges of each other, tied in different parts with withes of pine bark. Their furniture consists principally of chests and boxes, of various sizes, piled upon each other, at the sides or ends of their houses, in which are deposited their garments, and whatever they deem valuable. They have also square and oblong pails, and bowls to eat their food out of, &c. From their curing their fish in their houses, and leaving the bones and fragments in heaps of filth before the doors, and from their houses being without chimneys, their habitations have a strong, disagreeable smell of train-oil, fish, and smoke.

KISTI, one of the seven Caucasian nations that inhabit the countries between the Black Sea and the Caspian. They consist of 16 different districts, or tribes, which are often at variance with each other, and with their neighbours. Their dialects appear to have no analogy with any known language, and their history and origin are utterly unknown. Those belonging to the districts of Wapi, Angusht, and Shalkha, submitted to Russia in 1770. The Tshetshen tribe is so numerous and warlike, and has given the Russians so much trouble, that its name is usually given by them to the whole Kisti nation. The Ingushi live in villages near each other, containing about 20 or 30 houses; they are diligent husbandmen, and rich in cattle. Many of their villages have a stone tower, which serves, in time of war, as a retreat to their women and children, and a magazine for their effects. These people are all armed, and have the custom of wearing shields. Their religion is very simple, but has some traces of Christianity. They believe in one God, whom they call Dailé, and, on the first day of the week, rest from labour. They eat pork, and have a fast in spring, and another in summer. They observe no ceremonies either at births or deaths; but they allow of polygamy; and, at certain times, a sheep is sacrificed by a person who seems to be considered as a kind of priest, as he is obliged to live in a state of celibacy.

284 steps to the top, whence there is an extensive prospect. There are 18 churches in all, of which 14 are Lutherans, 3 Calvinists, and 1 is Romish. The number of houses is about 3800. The town is about 7 English miles in circumference, and, including the garrison of 7000 men, contains 60,000 inhabitants. It stands on the Pregel, a navigable river, which here falls into the eastern extremity of the Frische Haf, an inlet of the Baltic. No ships drawing more than 7 feet water can pass the bar, and come up to the town; so that the large vessels anchor at Pillau, a small town on the Baltic, which is the port of Konigsberg; and the merchandise is sent up in smaller vessels. The trade of Konigsberg is very considerable. It is 125 m. N of Warsaw. Lat. 54 42 N lon. 20 48 E.

KORIACS, a nation on the borders of Kamtschatka, tributary to the Russians. There are two sorts of Koriacs. Those who are properly called by that name have a fixed residence: the others are wanderers, and are known by the appellation of Rein-deer Koriacs. Their flocks are very numerous, and they maintain them by conducting them to those cantons that abound with moss. When these pastures are exhausted, they seek for others. In this manner they wander about incessantly, encamping under tents of skin, and supporting themselves with the produce of their deer, which are as serviceable for draught to the Koriacs, as the dogs are to the Kamtschadales. Their country is terminated to the S by the peninsula of Kamtschatka, and the Gulf of Penginsk; to the E by the Ocean; to the N by the country of the Tchoukchis: and to the W by the Tonguses, the Lamouts and the Yakouts. It is confidently asserted, that this country was formerly very populous, and that the small-pox had made very considerable ravages; but it is doubted whether that disease has carried off more of the inhabitants than their frequent contests with their neighbours, and with the Russians. The number of fixed Koriacs scarcely exceeds, at present, 900; and though it is not easy to calculate that of the wandering Koriacs, it is imagined that they do not much surpass this amount. Their regular occupation is hunting and fishing; but every season will not permit them to follow it. During these intervals, shut up in their profound habitations, they sleep, smoke, and get drunk. Thoughtless of the future, without regret for the past, they come not out of their yourts till the most urgent necessity compels them. These yourts are larger than those of the northern Kamtschadales, but are distributed nearly in the same manner, and are hardly more clean or comfortable, as they have not a vent-hole, or chimney, for the emission of the smoke. Like the Kamtschadales, they live upon dried fish, and the flesh and fat of the whale and sea-wolf. The wandering Koriacs have the same characteristic outlines as the Kamtschadales.

KURILES, a chain of islands, extending from the southern extremity of Kamtschatka to Japan, chiefly valuable for their furs, particularly that of the sea-otter. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Lopatka, who were themselves called Kuriles, gave these islands the same name, as soon as they became acquainted with them. They are 22 in number, exclusive of the very small ones. The northernmost island, which is called Shoomska, and the next, which is named Paramonsic, were first visited by the Russians in 1713, and, at the same time, brought under their dominion. The others, in order, are at present made tributary, down to Ooshesheer inclusive. Ooshesheer is the southernmost island that the Russians have yet brought under their dominion, but they trade to Ooroop, which is the 18th. A group of islands lies to the SW, which the Japanese call Jeso; a name which they also give to the whole chain of islands between Kamtschatka and Japan. The southernmost, called Matmai, hath been long subject to the Japanese, and is fortified and garrisoned on the side toward the continent.

LABRADOR, an extensive country to the E of Hudson's Bay, in N. America. The climate, even about Hay's River, in only lat. 57 N is excessively cold during winter. The snows begin to fall in October, and continue falling by intervals, the whole winter; and when the frost is most vigorous, in form of the finest sand. The ice on the rivers is then 8 feet thick; port wine freezes in a solid mass; brandy coagulates, and the very breath falls on the blankets of a bed in the form of a hoar frost. The sun rises in the shortest day at five minutes past nine, and sets five minutes before three. In the longest, it rises at three, and sets about nine. The ice begins to disappear in May, and hot weather commences about the middle of June, which, at times, is so violent, as to scorch the faces of the hunters. Thunder is not frequent, but sometimes violent. But there must necessarily be a great difference of heat and cold in this vast extent, which reaches from lat. 50 40 to lat. 62 N. Mock suns and halos are not unfrequent: they are very bright and richly tinged with all the colours of the rainbow. The sun rises and sets with a large cone of yellowish light. The night is enlivened by the aurora borealis, which spreads a variety of different lights and colours over the whole concave of the sky, not to be eclipsed even by the splendor of the full moon, and the stars of a fiery redness. There are several Moravian settlements on the E coast, the principal of which is Nain.

LADOGA, a lake in Russia, situated between the Gulf of Finland, and the Lake of Onega. It is about 100 m. long, and from 50 to 60 broad, and is the largest lake in Europe. Among the fish, with which it abounds, are seals. It is full of quicksands, which, being moved from place to place, by the frequent storms to which it is subject, cause several shelves along its course, on which the flat-bottomed vessels of the Russians are sometimes wrecked. This induced Peter I. to cause a canal to be cut from the SW extremity of this lake to the river Neva, by which it has a communication with the Gulf of Finland. It was begun in 1718, and finished in 1732; and is 67 m. long, and 70 feet broad.

LAHORE, the capital of a province of the same name, in Hindostan Proper, and in the Panjab, or Country of the Five Rivers, or five eastern branches of the Indus. It is a place of high antiquity, and was the residence of the Mahometan conquerors of Hindostan, before they had established themselves in the central parts of the country. It owed its modern improvements, however, to Humaioon, the father of Acbar, who made it his residence, during a part of his troublesome reign. Thevenot says, that, including the suburbs, it was 3 leagues in length at that period; and when he saw it, in 1665, the city itself was above a league in extent. Ice is brought from the northern mountains to Lahore, and sold there all the year. The famous avenue of stately trees, so much spoken of by the early Indian travellers, began at Lahore, and extended to Agra, near 500 English miles. Lahore is now the capital of the Seiks, a new power, whose name, even as a sect, was hardly known till the rapid decline of the Mogul's empire, in the present century. Here they have extensive mannfactures of cotton cloths, and stuffs of all kinds, and they make very curious carpets. It is situated on the S bank of the Rauvee, 280 m. N by W of Delhi, and 420 E of Candahar. Lat. 31 15 N lon. 72 48 E.

LAHORE, a province in Hindostan Proper, oftener called Panjab, and bounded on the W by Cabul and Candahar, on the N by Cachemire, on the E and SE by Sirinagur and Delhi, and on the S by Moultan. It is near 300 m. in length from E to W, and about 100 m. from N to S. The soil is remarkably fertile, abounding in rice, corn, vines, sugars, cotton, wool, and fruits of every kind. In the tract between the Indus and the Behat are salt-springs, wonderfully productive, and affording fragments of rock-salt, hard enough to be formed into vessels, &c.

Laighton, or Low Layton, Essex, 5 m. E of London. Laikirk, Yorkshire, NW of Barnard Castle. Laingdon, the name of two parishes, in Essex, contiguous to each other, in the road from Chelmsford to Tilbury Fort. The first is called Laingdon with Basildon; the second, Laingdon Hills, or Laingdon with West Lea. From this last, a most astonishing prospect, on the SE and SW breaks out almost at once from one of the dark lanes; it exhibits a very beautiful and extensive valley, with a view of London to the right; the Thames winding through the valley, full of ships, sailing up and down; the view extending to the left beyond the Medway, and bounded in front by the hills of Kent. LAMEGO, a town of Portugal, in Beira.

Lamer, Herts, on the N side of the river Lea, in Wheat Hamstead parish. Its church, built like a cathedral, is thought to be the oldest in the county: the rood appears to be left in it still, which serves for the clerk's desk. Lamersh, Essex, S of Sudbury. Lamerton, or Lamberton, Devons. 2 m. from Tavistock. Lamiford, Cumb. on the borders of Scotland and Northumb. Lamington, in Lanark, Scotland, 10 m. from Lanark. Lamitor Isle, Devons. adjoins Lundy. It abounds with samphire. Lamlash, a village of Scotland, on the E. coast of the Isle of Arran; the bay forms (according to Pennant) the safest harbour in the world. Lamley, Northumb. near Featherstonhaugh. Lamley, Nott. by Sherwood Forest. Lamley Lodge, Rutland, W of Ridlington Park. Lammas, Norfolk, near Warsted.

LAMMERMUIR, a mountainous ridge in Scotland, which divides the county of Berwick from that of Haddington for above 20 m. The mountains are, in general, covered with heath, and afford but scanty pasture for the sheep that feed on them.

Lammoram, Cornw. SW of Truro.

LAMO, an island and sea-port of Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar, in lat. 2, 0 S. and lon. 40 24 E. The king and government, being Mahometans, are frequently at war with the rest of the inhabitants, who are Pagans. In 1589, the king of this island was beheaded by the Portuguese. His crime, whether real or pretended, was his having basely betrayed the governor of the coast. For this he was seized, with four of his Mahometan subjects, in his own capital, and carried to Pate, where they were publicly executed, in the presence of the king of that island, and of several petty kings of the neighbouring islands; ever since which, Lamo has been tributary to the Portuguese.

Lamonby, Cumberland, NW of Penrith. Lamorney Point, Cornwall, W of Mount's Bay.

LAMPEDOSA, an uninhabited, but pleasant and fertile island, on the coast of Tunis, about 12 m. in circumference, with a good harbour, well supplied with fresh water, where ships touch at. It contains a building, divided into a church and a mosque, which is visited by both Catholics and Mahometans. Near it is a magazine, well provided, where vessels may find necessaries, for which they deposit the value in a chest, if money: and in the church, if goods. On certain days, some Sicilian monks come to collect the deposits, and bring other stores. The profits are applied to the benefit of the hospital at Trapani. Lat. 36 10 N lon. 11 0 E.

Lampets End, Glouc. in Hartpury parish. Lamplugh, Cumb. between Cockermouth and Egremont. Lamport, Bucks, in Stow parish. Lamport, 6 m. from Northampton. Lampton, near Durham. Lampton, Midd. near Hounslow. Lamridge, Westmoreland, NE of Kendal.

LANARK, a royal borough, of Lanarkshire, Scotland, 24 m. from Glasgow, and 30 from Edinburgh, on a rising ground, near the Clyde; it unites, with Linlithgow, Selkirk, and Peebles, to send a member to parliament.

Lanark, Monmouth, 5 m. from Abergavenny.

LANARKSHIRE, or CLYDESDALE, a county, in the centre of Scotland, between Dumfries, Midlothian, Ayre, and Peebles; it contains 2 royal boroughs, viz. Glasgow and Lanark, and has 41 parochial districts and 3 wards, containing 33,200 houses, and 191,752 inhab. Its extent, from N to S is about 40 m. and its mean breadth about 22. The southern part of this county is generally called Clydesdale. The river Clyde divides this county into two equal parts, called the shire of Lanark and the barony of Glasgow; the one hilly, healthy, and fit for pasture; and the other level, and proper for corn. It abounds with coal and lime-stones; has some lead mines, and quarries of lapis lazuli. The principal rivers are the Clyde, Annan, and Tweed.

LANARTH, a town of Cardiganshire, 195 m. from London. Market on Tues.

LANCASHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W by the Irish Sea, on the N by Cumberland and Westmoreland, on the E by Yorkshire, and on the S by Cheshire. It is 74 m. from N to S (including a detached hundred on the NW, called Furness, which is separated from the rest by a creek, at the head of Morecambe Bay), and from 15 to 44 in its greatest breadth. It is divided into 6 hundreds, which contain 26 market towns, 62 parishes, 894 villages, 149,360 houses, and 828,309 inhab. of whom 114,500 were employed in trade and manufactures. The air, in general, is very healthful, the inhabitants living to a great age. This county comprises a variety of soil and face of country; but, upon the whole, it is one of those which are the least favoured as to natural advantages, a proof of which is the ancient thinness of its population, shewn by the very small number of parishes into which it is divided. The hundred of Furness is a wild and rugged region, stored with quantities of iron ore and slate, and covered with a growth of underwood, which is cut in succession, and made into charcoal for the use of the iron furnaces. The eastern part of the county between the Ribble and the Mersey, comprising the ancient forests of Wyresdale and Bowland, is mountainous, and generally barren; but the southern part of the tract between these two rivers is flat, quite from the sea to the commencement of the ridge called Blackstone-edge that separates the county from Yorkshire. Much of this is a fertile country, though occasionally deformed by the black turf bogs, here called mosses: some of which are of large extent, and absolutely impassable in wet seasons. In the NE part of this division are some lofty hills, the most noted of which is Pendle Hill. The remaining part is varied with hill, dale, and moor. The natural products of this country are of little consequence, except the coal and turf with which its southern parts abound. Of the former is a species, called cannel, far exceeding all other, not only in making a clear fire, but for being capable of being manufactured into candlesticks, cups, standishes, snuff-boxes, &c. and of being polished, so as to represent a beautiful black marble. Lancashire is little adapted for a corn country, not only, in many parts, from the nature of its soil, but from the remarkable wetness of its climate; the land, however, is singularly fitted to the growth of the potatoe. All the rivers afford salmon; and the Mersey is visited by annual shoals of smelts, here called sparlings, of remarkable size and flavour. As a commercial and manufacturing county, Lancashire is distinguished beyond most others in the kingdom. Its principal manufactures are linen, silk, and cotton goods; fustians, counterpanes, shalloons, bays, serges, tapes, small wares, hats, sail-cloth, sacking, pins, iron goods, cast plate glass, &c. Of the commerce of this county, it may suffice to observe, that Liverpool is the third, if not the second, port in the kingdom. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Lone, Levon, Wyre, Hodder, Roche, Duddon, Winster, Ken, and Calder, and it has two considerable lakes, Winander Mere and Coniston Water.

LANCASTER, the county town, is an ancient, well-built borough town, containing 1700 houses, and 9247 inhab. On the summit of a hill stands the castle, which is not ancient, but large and strong, and now serves both as the shire-house and the county-gaol. On the top of this castle is a square tower, called John of Gaunt's Chair, where there is a fine prospect of the mountains of Cumberland, and of the course of the Lone; the view toward the sea, extending to the Isle of Man. The town-hall is a handsome structure. Lancaster carries on a considerable trade, especially to the West Indies, America, and the Baltic. The exports are hardware, woollen goods, candles, and cabinet work, for the making which last it is noted; and it has also a manufacture of sail-cloth. It is seated on the river Lune, which here forms a port for vessels of moderate size, and over which it has a new stone bridge of 5 elliptical arches, 66 m. S of Carlisle, and 235 NNW of London. Markets on Wedn. and Sat. and one on every other Wedn. for cattle.

LANCASTER, the county town of a county of the same name, in Pennsylvania. Its trade is large, and daily increasing. It contains an elegant court-house, and a college, founded in 1787, named Franklin College, with several churches, and about 5000 inhabitants. It is seated near the Susquehanna, 55 m. W of Philadelphia.

LANDEN, a town of Austrian Brabant, where the allies, under King William and the Elector of Bavaria, were defeated by the Duke of Luxemburg, July 21, 1693. The French were repulsed two or three times, and lost a great many officers and men, but returning to the charge, they gained a victory, which, however, cost them dear, having 15,000 killed, and between 9 and 10,000 wounded. The confederates lost 60 pieces of cannon, 9 mortars, &c. with several standards, colours, and about 7000 men killed and wounded. The French army amounted to 80,000 men, and that of the allies to less than one-third of that number. It is seated on the river Beck, 17 m. NW of Huy, and 16 SE of Louvaine.

LAPHAO, a town of the Island of Timor, in the Eastern Indian Ocean, inhabited by descendants of the Portuguese, of a copper colour, with black hair. It contains a church, and about 60 houses, and is situated at the bottom of a bay, on the N coast, with a harbour, and some trade with Goa and Batavia.

LAPLAND, a large country in the N of Europe, subject to Sweden. It is bounded on the N by the Frozen Ocean; on the E by the White Sea; on the S by Sweden and Bothnia; and on the W by Norway, being computed to be 450 miles in length, and 300 in breadth. The country chiefly consists of rocks, mountains, deserts, forests, heaths, fens, and lakes, so that it makes but an uncouth and very disagreeable appearance, and is very thinly inhabited, in proportion to its extent, yet abounds in a great variety of birds, beasts and fishes. The furs and skins of beavers, otters, black, red, and white foxes, &c. are their chief articles of trade, and they are enabled to sell a considerable quantity to their neighbours. The Laplanders are of middling stature, have generally a flattish face, fallen cheeks, dark grey eyes, thin beard, brown hair, are stout, straight, and of a yellowish complexion, occasioned by the weather, the smoke of their habitations, &c. Their manner of life renders them hardy, agile, and supple; but, at the same time, they are much inclined to indolence. They are peaceable, not given to theft, nor fickle; and so proud of their country and constitution, that, when removed from the place of their nativity, they usually die, it is said, of the nostalgia, or longing to return. The language of the Laplanders comprehends so many dialects, that it is with difficulty they understand each other. They preserve their pastoral manners, so that agriculture prospers not much among them. They are divided into Fishers and Mountaineers. The former make their habitations in the neighbourhood of some lake, whence they draw their subsistence. The others seek their support upon the mountains, possessing herds of rein-deer, which they use according to the season, but they go generally on foot. They are very industrious herdsmen, and are rich in comparison of the Fishers, some of them possessing six hundred or a thousand rein-deer. The castrated rein deer are alert, tame, large, strong, and handsome; on which account they use them for draught, and hold them in such estimation, that it is a compliment among them to call each other a gelt rein-deer. The Lapland fishers, who are also called Laplanders of the woods, because in summer they dwell upon the borders of the lakes, and in winter in the forests, live by fishing and hunting, and chuse their situation from its convenience for either. The introduction of fire-arms has almost entirely abolished the use of the bow and arrow. With respect to the larger animals, such as wild rein-deer, wolves, &c. they most frequently knock them down with clubs, as it is easy to come up with them by their snow-shoes, which are very long, and prevent them from sinking into the snow; bears they generally shoot, and finish them with spears. Besides looking after their rein-deer, the fishery, and the chace, the men employ themselves in the construction of their canoes, which are little, light, and compact. They also make sledges, to which they give the form of a canoe; harness for the rein-deer; all sorts of utensils in wood, such as cups, bowls, &c. which are sometimes prettily carved, sometimes ornamented with bones, brass, or horn; it is the man's business, likewise, to look after the kitchen. The employment of the women consists in making nets for the fishery, drying fish and meat, milking the rein-deer, making cheese, and tanning hides. They prepare the nerves of the rein-deer in such a manner as to make them serve for thread; and draw brass wire by the help of the horns of the rein-deer pierced, instead of a drawing-iron. They embroider their clothes with brass wire, silver, sham gold, or wool, which they have the art of dyeing in all sorts of colours. These people live in huts in the form of tents, covered with briars, bark, linen, turf, coarse cloth, felt, or rein-deer skins; and the door is of felt, made like two curtains, which open asunder. They are not able to stand upright in their huts, but sit upon their heels round the fire. At night they lie down and cover themselves with their clothes, and in winter put their feet into a fur-bag, separating their apartments with deer-skins. Their household furniture consists of iron or copper kettles, wooden cups, bowls, spoons, and sometimes tin, or even silver basins: to these may be added their implements of fishing and hunting. In their dress they use no linen. The men wear close breeches reaching down to their shoes, which are made of untanned skin, pointed, and turned up before; and in winter they put a little hay in them. Their doublet is made to fit their shape, and open at the breast; over this they wear a close coat, the skirts of which reach down to the knees, and it is fastened round them by a leathern girdle, ornamented with plates of tin or brass. To this girdle they tie their knives, their instruments for getting fire, and their smoking apparatus. Their clothes are made of fur, leather, or cloth; always bordered with fur, or cloth of different colours. Their caps are edged with fur, pointed at top, and the four seams adorned with lists of a different colour. The Russian Laplanders generally border their caps with rat skins. The dress of the women very much resembles that of the men; but their girdle is commonly embroidered with brass wire. Beside these, they wear kerchiefs, and little aprons, made of Russian painted cloth, rings on their fingers, and ear-rings, to which they sometimes hang chains of silver, which pass two or three times round the neck. They sometimes wear caps folded after the manner of turbans, and sometimes caps to the shape of the head; but all are ornamented with the embroidery of brass wire, or with list of different colours. The rein-deer supply the Laplanders with the greatest part of their provisions: the chace and the fishery furnish the rest; but the flesh of the bear is their most delicate meat. They eat every kind of fish, even the sea-dog; as well as all sorts of wild animals, not excepting birds of prey and carnivorous animals. Their winter provisions consist of flesh and fish, both of which they eat raw. They put the milk of the rein-deer into the stomachs of that animal, and so let it freeze; and when they want to use their frozen milk, they chop off pieces with a hatchet. The seasoning of their food is the fat of sea-dogs and salt, if they can get it. They make soups of a sort of cheese, which is so fat, that it takes fire on applying a candle. Their common drink is water, sometimes mixed with milk; brandy is scarce with them; but they are very fond of it. Their most considerable traffic is with the Norwegians. Formerly this trade was carried on in the way of barter, but coin is now current among them. The balance is always in favour of the Laplanders; because they can furnish more merchandise in skins and furs, than they buy flour, cloth, and hardware goods. Their weddings are kept at the bride's house, who is dressed in her best manner, and appears with her head quite uncovered, which, at other times, is never the custom, with either women or maidens; the feast is a kind of club mess, to which each of the guests brings meat and drink. The Lapps, in general, acknowledge the king of Sweden for their sovereign, and apply to the Swedish courts of judicature, all over Lapland: yet, at certain seasons, some of them pay tribute to Denmark or Russia, when they pitch their tents within the dominions of those crowns. Lapland is divided into 7 provinces, or lapmarks, which derive their name from the places of note in Nordland, in whose neighbourhood they lie, viz. Jamtland, Asele, Umea, Pitea, Lulea, Tornea, and Kiemi.

Lapley, Staff. SW of Penkridge. Lapside, Devons. near Hemlock. Lapworth, Warwicks. 8 m. from Warwick.

LEEDS, a town in the W. Riding of Yorks. situated in a vale, which trade has rendered it one of the most populous spots in England, 22 m.

WSW of York, and 192 N by W of London. It is the principal of the clothing towns in Yorkshire, and is particularly the mart for the coloured and white broad cloths, of which vast quantities are sold in its magnificent Cloth Halls. That called the mixed Cloth Hall, is a building of considerable extent, in which the cloth is placed on benches, for sale, every market day; and the whole business is transacted within little more than an hour, without the least noise or confusion, and with a whisper only, the laws of the market being observed here with particular strictness. The White Cloth Hall is a similar building. The manufactures that supply these two halls extend about 10 m. to the S 15 to the SW and 8 to the N and W, the mixed cloths being mostly made in the neighbourhood of the river Aire, and the white cloths in that of the Calder. Leeds has a manufactory of camblets, which has declined, and a flourishing one of carpets, resembling those of Wilts and Scotland. Here are also mills for the cutting of tobacco, and a great pottery, with several glass-houses. Within 3 m. of the town are numerous collieries. Of late years the town has been considerably enlarged; and some of the new parts are built, and building in an elegant style. It is situated on the river Aire, by which it communicates with all the various ramifications of the Grand Canal, and by which, in particular, it enjoys a very considerable trade in coals, from the inexhaustible stores in its neighbourhood, to York, Hull, &c. Markets on Tues. and Sat.

Leeds, Kent, on the Len, 5 m. from Maidstone, has an ancient castle, built originally by Ledian, a Saxon chief, counsellor to King Ethelred, and rebuilt by Sir Hugh de Crevecœur, in 1071. It is a most magnificent pile, built all of stone, in the midst of a beautiful park. At the entrance are the remains of an ancient gateway, that appears to have stood ever since its first foundation.
